The Final Bibliography

If exact indebtedness to sources is carefully acknowledged throughout the footnotes, a final bibliography may not be required. In scholarly publishing, a full-length book is usually supplied with one, an article is not. A teacher will often insist on a bibliography as an exercise in formal acknowledgment and a convenient map of the ground actually covered in preparing the paper. Ordinarily it should be no more than a selected bibliography. A complete inventory of all the discoverable sources may be useful to a specialist, but only an ingenuous student would expect extra credit for his ability to transcribe the card catalogue and the Reader's Guide. A selected bibliography contains only those items on the bibliography cards that have proved useful in writing the paper. The length of the list is roughly proportionate to the paper's scope. In a long list it may be convenient to have two or more groupings, separating books from articles, or sources of special importance from sources of general interest. For most research papers a single alphabetical listing is sufficient. Note that each entry in the following specimen contains the same information in the same order as on a bibliography card. If a book or article does not have an author, it is usually listed alphabetically under the first important word of the title.

The Final Draft

The final draft of the research paper should be typed—double-spaced—on one side of heavy white paper (not onion skin) 8½ x 11 inches and unlined. Footnotes and long indented quotations should be single-spaced. Two spaces should appear between footnotes and three between the text and the first note. The pages should be numbered with Arabic numerals, either centered at the top or in the upper right-hand corner. Whether held in a binder or merely with a paper clip, the pages should be kept flat, not folded as in a shorter composition. Margins should be at least an inch wide all around. The title should appear on both the first page (about two inches from the top) and on a separate title page, which should also include the author's name, the date, and the name of the course, if any. Corrections in the final draft should be strictly limited, preferably made by neat erasing and retyping. A sloppy paper inevitably suggests a sloppy mind. Besides, it is absurd for the writer to stumble in haste over the final barrier after he has taken so long to come so far.

Business Law

Business law deals with legal rules and principles of primary interest to the business community. Because of the complexity of modern business, the laws affecting businesses necessarily reach into diverse areas. Many of the laws are difficult and technical. Nevertheless, the person going into business or already in business should gain at least some familiarity with basic regulations and principles.

Although not a substitute for legal advice, such basic knowledge of the law allows the business person to make intelligent decisions and to foresee problems that may actually require legal advice or assistance. The following material provides an introduction to key concepts of business law.

Establishing a Business: Formats

Typically, the person going into business wants to be the sole owner of a particular enterprise. The simplicity of sole ownership, or sole proprietorship, is attractive. Whether the owner plans to add partners or employees later, it is usually possible simply to "set up shop."

The two main alternatives to sole proprietorship are the partnership and the corporation. In the former, two or more persons work together in a business enterprise, often on the basis of a partnership agreement. With a corporation (a separate legal entity) one or more persons can conduct business operations without taking responsibility for the debts of the business. Both the partnership and the corporation can take variant forms while maintaining a basic organizational pattern.

The Sole Proprietorship

The person operating a sole proprietorship owns the business in his or her own name. But the business can operate under the owner's name or a trade or business name: for example, "Mary Jones DBA ("doing business as") Jones Dress Shoppe."

Many states require that the person going into business as a sole proprietor register an assumed or fictitious business name under state and county laws. Typically, such a law is called an Assumed Names Act. Specific information is usually required, including the business name and the names and addresses of all persons who have an interest in the business.

There are many advantages to creating a sole proprietorship. The owner can keep track of the business' progress from month to month or year to year. He or she can control operating costs and can often avoid much of the paperwork required by other business arrangements. The sole proprietor remains the boss. If the business stays small, fulltime employees may not be needed.

Partnerships

A partnership is somewhat more complicated than the sole proprietorship but is less complex than the corporation. Formed, by two or more persons, the partnership is considered a business entity but not a tax entity. In other words, each partner must pay taxes on all partnership income.

Some other factors identify the partnership. Each partner, for example, is responsible for the debts and credit arrangements contracted by any other partner. Thus, any member of the partnership can bind the business and all its partners to business contracts and transactions. Professional partnerships were once common, but today, because most state laws allow doctors, lawyers, accountants, and other professional people to incorporate, the professional corporation has become a more standard form of business association. All members of such corporations share in the tax benefits.

The partnership agreement is sometimes informal—even oral. But ideally, partners should decide the terms of their agreement with the aid of a lawyer (see below).

A partnership has many of the advantages of a sole proprietorship but may also face similar strictures or regulations. An assumed or fictitious name must be registered. Generally, the various states levy no taxes on the right to function as a partnership or franchise. In addition, the partnership does not have to keep the general records required of a corporation. Unlike a corporation, which can stay in business indefinitely, a partnership usually dissolves on the death, retirement, or withdrawal of a partner.

The four main types of partnerships, each of which is used in specific circumstances, are the limited partnership, the joint venture, syndication, and the joint stock company.

Limited Partnership

In a limited partnership some or most of the partners can avoid the unlimited liability that characterizes the general partnership. Usually, the limited partnership has one general partner and a number of limited partners. The general partner is liable for the debts of the partnership and often for supervising all operations; the limited partners are liable only to the extent that they have invested in the partnership.

In those states that have Uniform Limited Partnership acts, the persons establishing a limited partnership must file a certificate of registration, usually with the secretary of state. The certificate gives the name of the business, its location, the names of the limited partners, and the partners' liabilities, powers, privileges, and duties.

A typical limited partnership may buy, manage, and sell apartment houses, hotels, and other kinds of real estate. The partners invest capital in the business and receive shares of the profits according to the amounts invested. A hybrid between the general partnership and the corporation, the limited partnership does not have to file articles of incorporation. Nor is it required to keep minutes or other records of operations. The limited partnership must, however, file partnership tax returns.

The Joint Venture

When two or more persons agree to join in a single transaction or project their partnership is called a joint venture. The partners in a joint venture agree to control and manage the business together. They must also agree to share profits and losses, usually on the basis of each partner's ownership interest in the property or project.

Thus, for example, should two or more persons jointly buy and own property but for some reason do not share its profits or losses, this would not be considered a joint venture. A joint venture occurs only when the parties intend to do business as a partnership.

Syndication

A joint venture that involves a large number of individuals is usually known as a syndicate. As with all true joint ventures, syndication requires tax filing as a partnership.

A public offering to sell a syndicate share or interest in a property or business requires special legal handling. The Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) has ruled that such sales to the public fall under securities laws.

Joint Stock Company or Association

Some partnerships operate under articles of association that provide for the issuance of a share of stock or certificate to each partner. The certificates represent each partner's interest. In such a joint stock company or association, the articles of association also provide that a group of partners, called the board of directors, will control the business. Individual partners cannot bind the other partners by entering into separate transactions in the name of the company or association. But participants in the association are responsible for all the legal debts and obligations incurred by the association as a whole.

Federal and state securities laws apply to sales of joint stock company shares or certificates. But, under the typical articles of association, individual partners can transfer their certificates without the consent of other participants. The articles normally specify how long the association will exist and provide that the death or withdrawal of any member will not affect the association.

The Corporation

Many consider the corporation the ideal way to organize a business. By law, the person or persons who own and operate the corporation are separate from it.

The corporation may be small or large. A small corporation is usually referred to as a close, or closely held, corporation. An individual may own all the stock in such a corporation and manage it alone or jointly with a few others.

But many corporations have hundreds or thousands of shareholders or stockholders. In either case the corporation files its own tax returns and pays its own taxes. Corporate meetings must be held and minutes kept for each meeting. To do business under an assumed name, the corporation—like the sole proprietorship or the partnership—must register according to state law.

The corporation, as a flexible form of business organization, generally has the following advantages:

- The persons who invest in the corporation have no liability for corporate debts or obligations beyond the amounts each has invested.
- By selling stock and securities the corporation can raise substantial sums to finance business programs and projects.
- By corporate charter, the corporation can exist "in perpetuity"—in effect, forever.
- Because the typical corporation of any size has a manager or board of directors who run day-to-day operations, the individual shareholders need not bother with the details of such operations.

The corporate format does have some disadvantages. For example, the corporation must pay taxes on its earnings. Later, when these earnings are distributed to shareholders as dividends, the shareholders must claim them in their own tax returns and pay additional taxes on them. Careful planning, however, can reduce or eliminate the hazards of such "double taxation." And many corporations find ways to enjoy other major tax advantages.

Another disadvantage of the corporation is that, as a separate legal entity, it must operate in accordance with specific laws and keep certain records. Some expense is involved in incorporating, and an application for a corporate charter must be accompanied by initial tax statements and other documentation in addition to the necessary filing fees.

Two other kinds of corporations or corporation-like business structures should be noted: the Subchapter S corporation and the business trust.

Subchapter S Corporations

The unique advantage of the Subchapter S structure is that such a business may operate as a corporation while following partnership tax regulations. This type of business organization, permitted under federal and most state laws, thus avoids corporate taxes while operating in corporate form.

All the income or losses of a Subchapter S corporation are taxed individually according to the amount invested by each shareholder. The shareholders have immunity from personal liability for the debts and obligations of the firm. At the same time they avoid double taxation. But a "Sub-S" corporation can have no more than 35 shareholders.

The Business Trust

The business trust is taxed as a corporation and enjoys many of the advantages of a corporation. It can be formed and operated under federal and most state tax laws. The death or withdrawal of a shareholder does not terminate the trust, nor do the shareholders have personal liability for the trust's debts and obligations.

Also known as a Massachusetts business trust or a common trust, the business trust has been defined as an unincorporated business organization. The trust document specifies that property is to be held and managed by the trustee for the benefit of beneficiaries who hold transferable certificates. The beneficiaries receive the profits from management of the property. The states that provide for the legal creation of business trusts generally require that a declaration of trust be filed before beneficiaries' shares can be sold or distributed. Transfers or sales of trust shares must take place in accordance with the securities laws of the various states.

Launching a Business: Documents and Procedures

"I'm forming a partnership with a close friend. Do I need an agreement in writing?"

This is a question that lawyers hear frequently. In nearly all cases the answer is Yes, definitely. Prospective partners may be members of the same family, old friends, or business associates, but the written agreement is nonetheless appropriate.

The reasons for drawing up such a partnership agreement are much the same as for preparation of a preincorporation agreement. Both help to build a foundation for the enterprise and to reduce the possibility of later misunderstandings and disagreements.

The Partnership Agreement

Most states have adopted what is called the Uniform Partnership Act to guide partners as they set up and conduct their businesses. Such an act has some commonsense provisions. For example, it may provide that if no partnership agreement exists, the partners will share equally in the business' profits. The law may also specify that each partner will, in the absence of an agreement, have an equal voice in the operation of the business.

An agreement in writing takes precedence over such legal provisions. The partners may specify in the agreement the percentage of profits each will receive or who will supervise which aspects of the business. For instance, Partner A may receive 60% of the profits and Partner B may supervise the business' sales force. Someone who brings special knowledge or expertise to the business, or who will have to work unusually long hours, may receive advance recognition. The agreement might also specify special compensation arrangements.

In general, the terms of a partnership should deal with basics as well as with the finer points of the business relationship. The basics include the name chosen for the business, the rights and duties of each partner, and the objectives of the business. The agreement can also make note of the investments or other assets contributed by each partner, such as real estate, vehicles, or office equipment.

The business name deserves some thought. Do not choose a name that could be confused with another company name already in use. It is important to select a name that will characterize the business, give it stature, or make it sound attractive or impressive. Some partnerships have names formed from partners' initials or names.

The agreement should typically indicate how long the partnership will last. If all partners feel it is appropriate, the partnership may be of indefinite duration. In such a case, the partnership will continue until it is dissolved by one or more of the partners or until one of them dies or withdraws.

Many partnership agreements state that the partnership will continue for five or ten years. At the end of the specified period the agreement can be renewed if desired.

Other clauses typically appear in partnership agreements. For example, the agreement gives the starting and ending dates of the partnership's fiscal year. Specific provisions may indicate how any partner can exercise the right to examine the partnership's books, make specific banking arrangements, and lay out procedures for hiring employees, with special attention in many cases to employment contracts.

Contribution of Capital

It is important that the partnership agreement indicate how much capital or other assets each partner has contributed. Insofar as possible, all such assets should be listed. They can include not only those items mentioned but leases, patent rights, and special equipment of one kind or another. All such items rank as capital.

In any partnership one partner may contribute one kind of capital whereas another may contribute another kind. The agreement should specify clearly what is being contributed and what its value is. Some evaluations may have to be made by rough estimate; in other cases an appraiser should be hired to place a value on a partner's noncash contribution.

The terms of the agreement should spell out, with dates or target times if possible, when partners' contributions are due. One partner may invest cash at the time the partnership comes into being; another may contribute funds a year later; a third may make working premises available from the time the partnership goes into business. A partner may agree to invest in the business the first $10,000 of his share of the partnership's profits. Another may loan money to the partnership under specified conditions of repayment. The conditions should include the interest rate to be charged.

Partners' Responsibilities and Powers

In most partnerships, the various partners perform different but complementary jobs. The roles to be played by the partners should be described in the agreement as clearly as possible.

Making such terms clear beyond the possibility of misunderstanding may be impossible. But the effort should be made. The management responsibilities and the amount of time to be devoted to each can obviously vary widely. Insofar as a determination of such details can be made, it should be.

Court cases involving partners frequently hinge on the question of whether one partner is devoting enough time and effort to the business. That fact alone suggests the importance of the advance thinking put into this part of the agreement. A number of related questions should receive attention. Is each partner to be allowed to engage in other business activities while also working for the partnership? To what extent? What other business activities? Will the partners be allowed to take part only in other activities that are completely different from the partnership business?

The answers to such questions may call for thought—in particular where the question of partners' participation in other businesses is concerned. Will a partner investing in and operating a business identical to that of the partnership be in competition with his or her partners? Such questions lie at the heart of many court decisions.

Profits and Losses

The most basic method of providing for equitable distribution of profits and losses is simple. The partners simply agree to distribute profits according to the investment of each partner in the business. A partner who contributes 25% of the funding for the partnership, receives 25% of the profits. He or she also bears 25% of the losses, if any.

That formula need not control in any given case. For any group of partners, another approach may be more appropriate. The important thing is that the partners work the formula out in advance and include it in the agreement. A special formula may work best. In one case three partners establishing a real estate management business agreed that in the first year Partner A would receive half of the first $50,000 in profits while partners B and C would receive $12,500 each. From that point on the partners would divide the profits equally.

Among other important financial questions, salaries and expense accounts rank high. Unless the agreement contains provisions on salaries, for example, no partner would be entitled to anything more than a share of the profits. Yet a salary might be appropriate if one partner is to spend more time on partnership business than the others. As for expense accounts, is any partner to have unlimited privileges? Will any partner receive advances from company funds to cover business travel and entertainment?

Dissolution of the Partnership

The terms of the partnership agreement should specify under what conditions dissolution may take place. Some examples suggest possibilities. In one case a partnership agreement provided that the business would continue if any of the four partners died or had to withdraw for health or other reasons. Thus, the agreement, in effect, ensured that a new partnership would take the place of the original one. The agreement also specified how the partner leaving the business, or that partner's family, would be compensated in case of death or withdrawal. The partnership share could, of course, have substantial value.

In another case a partnership agreement contained a buy–sell clause. That provision, common to most partnership agreements, specified the conditions under which the remaining partners could buy the share of a partner who was withdrawing for any reason. A method of establishing the value of a partnership share was also specified; an arbitrator familiar with business appraisals would be named to conduct an evaluation.

Such terms, in a sense, help to resolve legal problems in advance. They can, however, be even more specific. Some buy–sell provisions provide for a departing partner's right to select an arbitrator. The remaining partner or partners have the same right. After the two arbitrators have selected a third person to assist in the arbitration, the three jointly decide on the value of a partnership share. The decision is then final and binding.

A recommended way to make sure that surviving partners will be able to buy the share of a deceased or ailing partner is to buy life insurance on the lives of all the partners. The insurance provides the cash needed for the surviving partners to buy the deceased's share.

Corporate Agreements

Three friends have decided to go into business and incorporate. What now?

First, remember that state law controls the establishment of corporations. But different laws refer to the basic documents of incorporation in different ways. The articles of incorporation may, for example, be called the articles of agreement or charter, or the certificate of incorporation.

Second, in forming their corporation they will be making decisions regarding the ownership of the business, issuance of stock shares, contributions of the various owners, and other matters. As in the case of partnership agreements, the more thorough the answers to such questions are, the better the chance that the business will succeed.

There will be four directors. Because the state in which this corporation is formed requires a minimum of three directors, they have fulfilled a basic requirement. Many other states, as noted, would allow an individual to incorporate alone. But either way, as a group or singly, the procedures are essentially the same from state to state, with one exception. An individual incorporating as a one-person firm would not prepare a preincorporation agreement, but for four persons incorporating together, such an agreement is a good idea even though it is not required by law.

The Preincorporation Agreement

The agreement serves as an opportunity for each of the associates to make all the key decisions in advance. They can focus on areas of agreement and areas of potential disagreement and can make sure they are thinking alike. In this way they build for future business success.

The preincorporation agreement contains much that can be found in the typical partnership agreement: the corporate name, the purposes of the business, and so on. But the preincorporation agreement should address other questions as well, such as the stock to be issued, the number of shares to be authorized, the price per share, and the number of shares each associate will buy. The agreement should also specify any restrictions on transfers of shares and the procedures under which the corporation would buy the shares of an associate who dies or decides to sell out.

If such procedures are listed, the method of funding the purchases of associates' shares should be noted. Life insurance offers one effective method of funding in case of death.

Information as to how the corporation will be managed and controlled should appear in the agreement. It is important to specify the number of directors, to agree on what work each associate will perform in the corporation, and to establish salary schedules.

The name of the corporation has legal status. Most states require that the name be different enough from others already in use to avoid confusion. Because a name that is identical or very similar to any existing one may be rejected by state authorities, it is advisable to check with the governmental agency responsible for the registry of names to make sure the desired choice is available. If the name is already being used, it may nevertheless be possible to use it or a variation of it anyway, by obtaining permission from the owner of the name. Such permission should be in writing.

Most states require that the business name include a word or abbreviation indicating that the business is incorporated. The words that appear most often are Incorporated, Corporation, Company, Limited, or their abbreviated forms: Inc., Corp., Co., and Ltd.

The Articles of Incorporation

With the preincorporation agreement on paper, the articles of incorporation can follow. This is the document that actually establishes the corporation: the corporate charter, filed with a state agency and usually in a standard form according to instructions issued by the agency itself. The agency may be the office of the secretary of state. In some states the articles of incorporation have to be filed with the local county clerk as well.

Other information in the articles of incorporation parallels that of the preincorporation agreement to some extent. The corporate name appears, followed by a statement of corporate purposes. Whereas some states require only a statement that the new firm will engage exclusively in lawful activities, others need specific information. The statement should be worded broadly so that the corporation has reasonable latitude in its later selection of business activities.

The business purposes of many young corporations change with time. In such cases the corporations simply file an amendment to the articles of incorporation to broaden the range of corporate purposes.

The articles of incorporation state how many shares of stock will be issued, where the firm's main office will be, and who in the corporation can be served with lawsuit papers. Most states do not require that all the shares of stock be issued at once. For that reason many corporations issue only enough shares to cover immediate and foreseeable needs. In some states lawsuit papers have to be filed with the secretary of state, who then serves the corporate officer designated in the articles of incorporation.

Finally, the articles of incorporation should note the names and addresses of the incorporators. The period for which the corporation is formed should be given if it is not perpetual. The state collects a filing fee when the incorporators register the articles.

Normally, the beginning corporation faces five other basic challenges.

1. To draw up bylaws. Much more complete than the articles of incorporation, the bylaws detail the rights and powers of the corporate officers, shareholders, and directors. The bylaws also give a time and place for the annual meetings, specify how notices of meetings will be sent out, indicate what constitutes a quorum, make provision for special meetings, and state how shareholders can act without formal meetings.

The bylaws touch on other subjects as well. They note how many directors the corporation has—usually a president, secretary, and treasurer; who the directors are and how they are elected; and what their powers and responsibilities are. In other provisions the bylaws describe the stock certificates, name the person or persons authorized to sign contracts and insert the corporate books and records, and specify how the bylaws can be amended.

2. To adopt the bylaws and elect the first board of directors. This task falls to the shareholders of the new corporation, the persons holding ultimate power. In a meeting held after the state has approved the articles of incorporation, the shareholders adopt the bylaws and elect the corporation's first board of directors.

In a small corporation, the same people may be officers, directors, and shareholders. When they set the ground-rules under which the business will operate, they are in effect making rules for themselves. In a larger corporation, the shareholders set policy but do not take part in day-to-day operations. They meet at least annually—and more frequently if the need arises. The annual meetings provide opportunities to review the corporation's annual report, elect new directors or reelect incumbents, and vote on policy changes.

3. To hold the first directors' meeting. The directors of the new corporation usually meet for the first time after the incorporators' meeting. Among other items of business, the directors elect the corporate officers, consider and ratify contracts, and approve all management plans. The board of directors may also confirm corporate banking arrangements and authorize the issuance of stock.

4. To issue corporate stock. Once the stock has been paid for, the corporation issues certificates that show the name of the corporation, the number of shares that each certificate represents, the type of share, and the name of the individual shareholder. Usually, the corporate president and secretary sign the certificates. If the stock sale is restricted, this information generally appears on the back of each certificate.

5. To make a Subchapter S election. In this step the business founders decide whether they want to be treated, for federal tax purposes, as a Subchapter S corporation. To be eligible to make such an election, the firm cannot have more than 35 shareholders. It must also have only one class of stock. The election must be made during the first 75 days of the tax year. All the shareholders must agree that the election of Subchapter S status should be made.

The Factor of Control

Whether a new business starts as a partnership or corporation, the founders should carefully consider the question of control: of ways and means of maintaining the authority of the founders and protecting their interests in the business.

A number of considerations are involved, such as those framed in the following questions: Who will be allowed to buy, inherit, or otherwise gain ownership of partners' or other shares? How do the controlling parties ensure that they retain management and supervisory responsibility? Who might be admitted to the inner circle in the future?

Retention of control involves complex legal questions. These reinforce the contention that a lawyer should help prepare all the basic business documents. The type of business, the methods by which interests may be transferred to others, possible restrictions on such transfers, employment contracts—all are important. Particular questions may hinge on interpretations of state laws dealing with restrictions on transfers of shares, on transfers of business control, and on other questions.

Some widely used methods of retaining control include the following:

1. Restrictions on transfers of interest. In general, the law frowns on restraints on sales or on assignments of business or property rights. But shareholders in a corporation can, for example, agree on a stock transfer restriction. Under such an agreement, the other partners or shareholders have the right of first refusal before a business share or stock can be sold to a third party outside the business. Where multiple shares are for sale, the other shareholders can usually buy in proportion to the total number of shares each owns.

Stock transfer restrictions generally appear in corporate bylaws. They are also printed on share certificates. The printed restriction puts a prospective purchaser on legal notice that resale restrictions exist.

2. Employment Contracts. An employment contract, or a series of them, between a partnership and its partners or between a corporation and its officers ranks as another way to retain control of a business. The contract spells out the rights, duties, and obligations of both parties—company and individual. The contract may restrict the individuals' ownership rights.

An employment contract may have other purposes. It may, for example, help the owner of a business protect patents or inventions with which the employee becomes acquainted. The contract may also provide details on a complicated compensation plan, or protect against competition from the employee should he or she leave the firm's employment.

3. Voting Rights. As businesses grow and add employees, shareholders, and others, voting rights become extremely important. A majority of shareholders might, in a given case, try to assume control by changing the business' purpose, design, or basic direction. Various kinds of voting restrictions can be used to protect the business operation, among them these:

• A corporation may provide for voting and nonvoting stock, for voting rules that ensure that the minority group is represented on the board of directors, and for elections of different directors in specified years.

- Shareholder agreements may require that shareholders vote their stock in a certain way. Shareholders might, for example, be able to vote only for other shareholders for the board of directors. "Outsiders" would be excluded. It should be noted, however, that such restrictions on voting or transfers of shares could inhibit many investors from buying the company's stock.
- Using a voting trust agreement, a number of shareholders may join together to give a lesser number, called the trustees, the right to vote on all the shares. The trustees themselves can agree on how the votes will be cast.
- Where state laws permit, the charter and bylaws of a corporation may provide for special requirements on quorums and shareholder votes. For example, a two-thirds majority might be needed to change the business' bylaws.
- A corporation's bylaws, a partnership agreement, or a shareholder agreement might make arbitration an alternative where disagreements arise. The arbitration option would be invoked in case of a voting deadlock.

4. Buy–Sell Agreements. A buy–sell agreement among the shareholders of a corporation ensures that the corporation can buy the stock of a deceased stockholder. The estate of the deceased has to sell the stock; the corporation has an obligation to buy. To ensure the corporation's ability to repurchase such shares, the firm must have a stock retirement program. Under an alternative program, called a cross-purchase plan, other stockholders can buy the shares of the deceased.

Establishing a price for stock to be purchased from the estate of a deceased shareholder may or may not be a problem. If the shares are traded on a regional or national stock exchange, the price quotation for a given day determines the price. In a close corporation, however, the problem of evaluation becomes critical. A mandatory buy–sell agreement always outlines an effective method of determining the price of a share of stock. The methods include the appraisal, the book value, and various other methods.

5. Partnership Buy–Sell Agreement. Under a partnership buy–sell agreement, the estate of a deceased partner has an obligation to offer the decedent's partnership interest for sale to the surviving partner or partners. The agreement should specify the terms of the sale. Both the partners and their spouses should sign the agreement. In many cases, life insurance offers the best method of purchasing the partnership interest of a deceased partner.

Business Contracts

You decide to have your office painted. You sit down with Tom Johnson, a painter, to discuss cost. Tom says he can do the job for $550. He would have the work completed in exactly two weeks. You say, "It's a deal." With those words you have a legally binding contract. All the necessary elements are present:

- Parties competent to contract.
- An offer (Tom's indication that he can do the work at a certain price by a certain date).
- Acceptance (your agreement to pay the $550).
- Consideration. The two of you are exchanging things of value. You have promised to pay $550 and Tom has promised to paint your office.

The Four Elements

Obviously, business contracts are rarely as simple and straightforward as the above example. But all contracts have to share the basic elements or they will not be regarded as contracts under the law.

The requirement that the parties to the contract be competent has special meaning. The contracting parties cannot be minors, for example, under the laws of the state in which the contract is made. Also, the parties must be sane. They must be capable of handling their own affairs.

At the offer stage of contract formulation, the law presumes that one party to the arrangement can provide something of value. In the example, Tom the painter offered to paint your office. He told you what the work would cost. He did not say he could probably do the work for $550, or that he would need half of that sum down, with the rest to follow on completion of the job; he stated his price.

Your acceptance followed when you said, "It's a deal." Where the second element involves mutuality of obligation, the acceptance phase involves legal consideration: in this case, what you agree to pay. The legal consideration can be many things besides money or property. An exchange can involve services.

Another type of consideration is known as detrimental reliance. You would have created the possibility of such a consideration if you had said to five painters, "I will pay $500 if one of you will paint my office." A painter relies on your promise, paints your office, and can sue you for breach of contract if you do not pay the $500.

Legality of purpose has equally broad legal meanings. No contract is enforceable if its purpose is illegal. But what does illegal mean? If the contract calls for the performance of an immoral or statutorily illegal act, it is unenforceable. The same applies if it goes contrary to a state's public policy. Examples of the latter include contracts to restrain trade, to evade or oppose revenue laws, and to corrupt legislative or judicial bodies.

Breach of Contract

Whether written or oral, a contract that has the four basic elements is enforceable at law. Enforcement becomes an alternative in the case of a breach of contract by one party or the other. A lawsuit in such a case seeks to recover whatever damages are suffered because of the breach.

The Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), valid in all states except Louisiana, sets the standards of some key aspects of contract law. The UCC, for example, provides that a written agreement be produced in a breach-of-contract case involving the sale of goods for $500 or more. The agreement need not be extremely detailed. It has only to indicate that the parties agreed on the sale and that such-and-such a quantity was involved. The UCC requires inclusion of such other factors as price, time and place of delivery, and quality of the goods.

Article Two of the UCC deals with the sale or transfer of goods or personal property. It specifies that a "merchant" (a person with special knowledge, skills, and familiarity with a business) has special rights and obligations. He or she has a kind of professional status. Three principal rules apply:

- Between merchants, the law usually requires a written contract where goods valued at more than $500 are sold.
- A merchant's offer to buy or sell goods, made in writing and signed by the merchant, must be held open for a "reasonable" or specified length of time—and is not revocable during that time.

- A definite, written, and timely expression of acceptance creates a contract between merchants.

Violation of any of the stated UCC rules creates a cause of action—a reason to sue. A successful plaintiff generally receives compensatory damages. Insofar as possible, these compensate the plaintiff for damages ensuing from the broken contract. But there are other kinds of damages:

- Consequential damages, awarded where a plaintiff proves that a breach of contract had secondary negative effects.
- Liquidated damages, awarded when, for example, delay in the delivery of services or goods resulted in day-by-day losses for a plaintiff.
- Equitable relief may be invoked by a court to compel a delinquent defendant to deliver on a promise in a contract. A defendant may be required to deliver, for example, a work of art or an item of jewelry as promised in a legal contract.

Required Written Contracts

Under the statutes of frauds enacted by all states, some contracts have to be in writing. Typically, a statute of frauds would require that contracts be written when:

- the ownership of real estate is changing hands;
- real estate is being leased for more than a year;
- someone promises to pay the debt of someone else;
- performance under the contract will take more than a year;
- someone is agreeing to pay a commission for the sale of real estate; or
- a sale of goods, or tangible personal property, is being transacted.

Ordinarily, a contract need not be a formal legal document. A memorandum may be enough. But it should give the names of the parties, information on the subject matter, and the important terms and conditions. The signatures of the contracting parties should appear on the memorandum even though both may not be required legally.

What happens when a statute of frauds states that a contract is required but the parties have proceeded under an oral agreement? A lawsuit may be possible anyway. A suit may be justified, for example, where the oral agreement has been partially performed.

Defenses in a Breach-of-Contract Suit

A defendant in a breach-of-contract suit can utilize any of a variety of defenses. He or she may, depending on the circumstances, claim any of the following:

- That no breach took place.
- That the plaintiff suffered no damages.
- That the contract is invalid because a basic element is missing.
- That the statute of frauds requires a written contract and none exists.
- That the contract is illegal or against public policy and is therefore illegal.
- That the other contracting party misrepresented the facts to induce the defendant to sign the contract.
- That the contracting parties made a mutual mistake that resulted in a misunderstanding of what was to be sold or done.

The Business and the Consumer

Currently, the consumer protection movement is gathering momentum. Based on the concept that the consumer needs the protection of the law, the movement tries to prevent companies from exerting pressure on the consumer, or from taking advantage of him or her. Because the consumer is in fact vulnerable when buying goods, borrowing funds, or investing for financial gain, a business owner should know some basics of consumer law.

Consumers have protection today in a number of areas, including the following:

- methods by which goods are presented, including during sales and in advertising;
- packaging and labeling of goods;
- methods used in selling goods;
- credit sales; and
- protection of consumer defenses.

Many more such areas could be listed. But these are among the most important. Each can be discussed separately.

Deceptive Practices in Sales

Various government agencies have passed statutes, rules, and regulations that forbid or restrict deceptive practices in the sale of consumer goods. Endorsements by persons with high public exposure, for example, may not be false or misleading. In a typical case an athlete or movie star will state publicly (perhaps on television or radio) that a specific product is safe or of outstanding quality. If the product does not meet the described standards, the endorser has taken part in deception. A lawsuit may be the consumer's best remedy.

Even if not intended to do so, a company's advertising may in effect deceive potential buyers. The deception need not involve an intentionally fraudulent act; the only test today is whether the buyer was misled.

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) repeatedly challenges advertisers regarding misleading or deceptive advertising. The FTC also tries to protect consumers in other ways. The Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act, for example, requires that a health warning appear on each package of cigarettes sold. Radio and TV can no longer carry cigarette advertising. Other forms of cigarette advertising have to display the health warning prominently.

In advertising goods for sale at retail, store owners and others once used various forms of deception. One, called the "bait and switch," involved ads for "specials" that were not in stock in sufficient quantity to meet anticipated demand—or that were not in stock at all. The advertiser counted on "baiting" the customer into the shop or store and then selling him or her some other item or items, usually at higher prices.

The laws of many states outlaw such practices. Such laws may also prohibit "going out of business" advertising when the business is not really being discontinued, "fire sales" when there has been no fire, or "lost our lease" sales when no lease has been lost.

Packaging and Labeling

Many federal laws have dealt in recent years with deception in labeling and packaging. Among the laws are the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act; the Fair Products

Labeling Act; and the Food, Drug, and Cosmetics Act. In addition, various state and federal laws have outlawed the use of such terms as "full," "jumbo size," and "giant size."

Legislation in existence also requires specifics on labels. Under the Fair Products Labeling Act, a product label must identify the type of product, the name and place of business of the manufacturer, the packer or distributor, the net quantity of all the contents, and the net quantity of one serving if the label also gives the number of servings. Both the FTC and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services have authority to require additional information or disclosures on a label.

Other legislation establishes standards and protects consumers in various ways. Food, drugs, and cosmetics receive special attention. The federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulates labeling and packaging of all such items. The FDA also has authority to prevent "quackery" in medicine and drugs and to investigate "miracle drug" claims.

Approval and Testing of Goods

Many products are sold with a guarantee, tag, or other indication that the products have been tested and approved by some agency or organization. The "seal of approval" or tag means that the product has been tested and approved for normal consumer use. The seller has violated a warranty made to the consumer and may be liable for fraud if the product has not actually been tested and approved.

Tests and approvals, or tests alone, may precede the sale of some products. Products involving fire and electrical safety features may undergo tests by manufacturers' associations or testing companies for insurance purposes. Successful testing means a product meets industry safety standards. Some private and industry testing agencies, including consumer organizations that publish test results in their own magazines, simply report what their tests have revealed. No conclusions are drawn.

Some magazines also accept product advertising that includes "money back" guarantees. The guarantee requires only that the price of a product be refunded or that it be replaced if the product is defective. If a consumer is injured by the defective item, the magazine or organization giving its approval may be liable under the expanding concept of product liability.

Controls on Methods of Selling Goods

Many laws today regulate the ways in which merchants can sell their goods. The goal is always the same: to prevent violations of consumer rights. But some laws also provide for means of punishing the fraudulent or unlawful merchant. In two areas in particular, fair disclosure of contract terms and sales by mail, legislative action has created a network of protections for buyers or consumers.

Fair Disclosure of Contract Terms

The Consumer Credit Protection Act, better known as the "Truth in Lending Act," was designed to let the consumer know exactly what the credit offered by a lender will cost. Knowing what one lender's rates are, the consumer can "comparison shop" for a better "deal." This is true whether the individual is taking out a mortgage loan to buy a house, buying furniture or an automobile, paying for home improvements on the installment plan, or charging meals, gasoline, or repair costs.

The Truth in Lending Act does not apply if no interest or other charges are added to the basic cost of a given item. The Act does ensure the availability of information on the two key factors in the cost of credit—the finance charge, or the amount paid to obtain credit, and the annual percentage rate (APR), the percentage of interest paid over a year's time. The finance charge includes not only the interest to be paid but also any service, carrying, or other charges. The APR must be computed for the consumer on the total cost of credit.

The Truth in Lending Act deals also with advertising. Where an ad mentions one feature of credit, such as the amount of the down payment, it must also mention all the other important terms.

Mail-Order Sales

More and more businesses are offering goods and services through the mail. Federal laws protect the consumer from mail fraud. State statutes may also prohibit mail-order fraud or deceit. Because most mail-order sales involve small amounts, the consumer may find it difficult or impossible to recover losses.

In mail-order sales the consumer has the following rights:

- to know when shipment of the merchandise can be expected;
- to have the merchandise shipped within 30 days;
- to cancel an order when merchandise is not shipped within 30 days;
- to be notified of delays and to have a free means of replying, such as a postage-free postcard;
- to agree to a new shipping date; and
- to have any payment returned if 30 days elapse and the merchandise is not shipped.

Where a person receives free samples or items mailed by charitable organizations seeking contributions, the recipient can, as he or she wishes, regard the merchandise as a gift.

Control of Methods of Payment

Protective laws regulate the methods by which payments may be made or demanded by a creditor on a consumer sale. Some state laws provide that if a creditor accepts payment in a form other than cash or check, the creditor takes a chance. State laws may also provide that installment payments have to be applied to the oldest unpaid portions of a debt. The payment sent by a debtor who is three months delinquent on an open credit account must go toward payment of the oldest monthly charge.

Both federal and state laws regulate accelerated and "balloon" final payments. At one time unscrupulous creditors or lenders could make the last payment in a monthly series larger than the debtor could pay. The lender could then repossess the merchandise when the debtor defaulted. Most laws now specify that if the final payment is double the average of the earlier scheduled payments, the debtor has the right to refinance the final payment on terms similar to those of the original transaction.

Other Financial Areas

In many other money areas the laws protect the consumer without prejudicing the rights of the businessperson. Credit cards, for example, the symbols of the so-called "cashless society," can no longer be issued to persons who have not applied for them. Also, in case of loss of a credit card, the owner cannot be held liable for more than $50 for purchases made illegally by the finder. But such purchases must have been made before the owner has notified the company issuing the card. If they are made after that time, the card holder cannot be held liable at all.

In contract sales, the "fine print" on the reverse sides of some agreements once provided that the buyer waived some legal protections. Under some recent consumer statutes, however, the buyer cannot inadvertently waive all such defenses. Where a household appliance is defective, for example, under the consumer protection statutes of many states the buyer has the right to withdraw from the contract.

Wages and salaries make up another sensitive area. In general, the laws provide that the right to earn a living and support one's family takes precedence over any right to garnish or attach a person's earnings.

Federal and state laws contain many other provisions designed to protect the consumer. For example, the methods by which debts may be collected are strictly controlled. Credit reporting, which affects the individual's credit rating and, often, his or her ability to get a job and to purchase needed items, falls under the provisions of the Fair Credit Reporting Act of 1970. The Act applies only to personal, household, and family credit, and not to business or commercial credit. Very importantly, the Act gives the person whose credit-worthiness is in question the right to find out the name and address of the reporting agency. The individual then has the right to have any errors in the report corrected.

Business Math

Business Math is, as the term implies, the math that meets the needs of business. It differs from the math used in our daily lives only in the respect that its methods have been adapted to the special requirements of business. The businessman wants to know at what price to sell an article in order to make a certain profit, how much he may deduct from a bill if he pays for an order in cash, whether it is to his advantage to invest his money in one kind of stock or another. These and other practical problems that the businessman faces constitute the bulk of our Business Math section. In addition, we present at the outset some helpful hints that will save time in performing the mathematical computation that is required in solving the business problems later in the section.

It is suggested that the steps given here in solving problems be followed exactly, and that all information required be written down and clearly labeled. Only later, when the methods of solution can be readily applied, should short cuts be taken and steps be performed without indicating them on paper.

Easy Methods of Calculation

Short Cuts in Addition

In adding a column of figures, speed and rapidity will be attained by following these suggestions:

1. Take a combination of numbers which adds to 10 and add them as 10.

Example

Add:

$$\begin{array}{r} (8\ 7\ 5 \\ (2\ 8\ 6) \\ 2\ 8\ 4) \\ 2\ (8\ 3 \\ (2\ (2\ 2) \\ \hline 2\ 8\ 4\ 5 \end{array}$$

Add the right-hand column from the top down as follows: 5, 15, 25, carry 2.

Add the second column from the top down as follows: 2, 9, 17, 25, 35, 44, carry 4.

Add the third column from the top down as follows: 4, 14, 16, 18, 28.

2. Take any combination of numbers which total 10 or less and add them as that total. For example, add 2, 3, 4 as 9; add 2, 2, 3 as 7; add 1, 2, 3 as 6; add 2, 4, 2 as 8.

3. Add 9 as 10 and then subtract 1. For example, 65 + 9 = 75 − 1 = 74.

Short Cuts in Multiplication

1. To multiply an integer (whole number) by 10 or a power of 10. Rule: Add one zero to the number to be multiplied for each zero in the multiplier.

Example

65 × 10	= 650	Add 1 zero.
301 × 100	= 30,100	Add 2 zeros.
750 × 1000	= 750,000	Add 3 zeros.
236 × 10,000	= 2,360,000	Add 4 zeros.
185 × 100,000	= 18,500,000	Add 5 zeros.

2. To multiply an integer by 5. Rule: Multiply by 10; take ½ of the answer.

Example

650 × 5
650 × 10 = 6500
½ of 6500 = 3250, Answer

3. To multiply an integer by 15. Rule: Multiply by 10: take ½ the answer and add both.

Example

786 × 15
786 × 10 = 7860
½ of 7860 = 3930
11,790, Answer

4. To multiply an integer by 11. Rule: Multiply by 10; add the original number.

Example

295 × 11
295 × 10 = 2950
295 (original number) 295
3245, Answer

5. To multiply an integer by 9. Rule: Multiply by 10; subtract the original number.

Example

293 × 9
293 × 10 = 2930
293 (original number) − 293
2637, Answer

6. To multiply an integer by 50, 25, 12½. Rule: Multiply by 100; then multiply the answer by ½, ¼, or ⅛ as the case may be because 50, 25, and 12½ are ½, ¼, and ⅛ of 100 respectively.

Example 1

275 × 100 = 27,500
½ of 27,500 = 13,750, Answer

Example 2

326 × 25
326 × 100 = 32,600
¼ of 32,600 = 8150, Answer

Short Cuts in Division

1. To divide an integer by 10 or a power of 10. Rule: Move the decimal point in the number to be divided as many places to the left as there are zeros in the divisor.

Example 1

875 ÷ 10
875 ÷ 10 = 87.50, Answer

Example 2

$975.85 ÷ 1000
$975.85 ÷ 1000 = $.97585, Answer

Exercise

1. 800 × 10 =
2. 900 × 50 =
3. 1756 × 100 =
4. 288 × 25 =
5. 300 × 15 =
6. 756 ÷ 10 =
7. 97.8 ÷ 100 =
8. 42.6 ÷ 1000 =
9. 285 × 5 =
10. 88 × 11 =
11. 99 × 9 =
12. 1725 × 15 =
13. 836 × 1000 =
14. 19.5 ÷ 10 =
15. 28.65 ÷ 100 =

Devices for Checking the Four Fundamental Operations

Addition

Add the column from top to bottom. Write the answer. Check by adding the column from bottom to top.

Subtraction

Add the answer or remainder to the subtrahend. The result should equal the minuend.

Operation	Check
86 minuend	68 remainder
−18 subtrahend	+18 subtrahend
68 remainder	86 minuend

Multiplication

Multiply the multiplicand by the multiplier. Then make the multiplicand the multiplier and the multiplier the multiplicand, and multiply.

Operation	Check
85 multiplicand	15 multiplicand
× 15 multiplier	× 85 multiplier
425	75
85	120
1275 product	1275 product

A second check is to divide the product by the multiplier. The answer should be the multiplicand. Or divide the product by the multiplicand and the answer should be the multiplier.

Check

Percentage

The term "per cent" is derived from the Latin. It means "by the hundred." To illustrate, take the number 1 and divide it into 100 parts. Each part is 1/100 of 1 and may be expressed in three ways, as follows:

1. Common fraction—1/100.
2. Decimal fraction—.01.
3. Per cent—1%.

The value of percentage lies in its use as a basis of comparison in various business transactions. It acts as a common denominator to which everything may be reduced, thus enabling the comparison to be made.

Per Cent, Fractions, and Decimals

1. To change a decimal to per cent. Rule: Move the decimal point two places to the right and then write a per cent sign.

Example 1

Change .15 to per cent.
.15 = 15%

Example 2

Change .075 to per cent.
.075 = 7.5%

Example 3

Change 6 to per cent.
6.00 = 600%

2. To change a common fraction to per cent. Rule: Change the common fraction to a decimal; then change the decimal to a per cent.

Example 1

Change 3/8 to a per cent.

$$\begin{array}{r} .375 \\ 8\,)\,3.000 \\ \end{array}$$

3/8 = .375

.375 = 37.5% or 37½%

Example 2

Change 17/19 to a per cent.

$$\begin{array}{r} .89\frac{9}{19} \\ 19\,)\,17.00 \\ 15\,2 \\ \hline 18\,0 \\ 17\,1 \\ \hline \frac{9}{19} \end{array}$$

17/19 = .89 9/19

.89 9/19 = 89 9/19%

Exercise

Express the following as per cent:

1. ½	6. .0075
2. 4/3	7. .02½
3. 5/6	8. .3
4. 11/20	9. 15/28
5. .08	10. .006

Answers:

1. 50%	6. .75% or ¾%
2. 133⅓%	7. 2½%
3. 83⅓%	8. 3/10% or 30%
4. 55%	9. 53 4/7%
5. 8%	10. 3/5% or .6%

3. To change a per cent to a decimal. Rule: Move the decimal point two places to the left and take away the per cent sign.

Example 1

Express 17% as a decimal.
17% = .17

Example 2

Express 8.5% as a decimal.
08.5% = .085

Example 3

Express 525% as a decimal.
525% = 5.25

Example 4

Express .75% as a decimal.
75% = .0075

Exercise

Express the following per cents as decimals:

1. 2½%	6. .5%
2. 37½%	7. .05%
3. 650%	8. .25%
4. 7.5%	9. 16.75%
5. 18.8%	10. 123%

Answers:

1. .025	6. .005
2. .375	7. .0005
3. 6.50	8. .0025
4. .075	9. .1675
5. .188	10. 1.23

4. To change a per cent to a common fraction. Rule: Change the common fraction to a decimal; then to a per cent.

Example 1

Change 25% to a common fraction.
25% = .25
.25 = 25/100 = ¼, Answer

Example 2

Change 150% to a common fraction.
150% = 1.50
1.50 = 1½ or 3/2, Answer

Exercise

Change the following to common fractions:

1. 50%	6. 75%
2. 20%	7. 80%
3. 40%	8. 62½%
4. 33⅓%	9. 87½%
5. 16⅔%	10. 12½%

Answers:

1. ½	6. ¾
2. 1/5	7. 4/5
3. 2/5	8. 5/8
4. ⅓	9. 7/8
5. 1/6	10. ⅛

Problems in Percentage

In computing a problem in percentage, the number or quantity upon which the per cent is to be computed is called the base, the per cent is called the rate, and the product of the base and the rate is called the percentage. All problems in percentage fall into three groups or cases.

Case I. Given the base and the rate, to find the percentage. Rule: Base × Rate = Percentage.

Example 1

Find 25% of 7800.
Change 25% to .25; then multiply:
7800 × .25 = 1950, Answer

Example 2

Find 250% of 19,600.
19,600 × 2½ = 49,000, Answer

Exercise

Find the percentage:

1. 15% of 980
2. 12½% of 640
3. 33⅓% of 999
4. 125% of 260
5. 18% of 480
6. ¾% of 1200
7. .75% of 1600
8. 2½% of 1640
9. 10% of 968
10. 19% of 200

Answers:
1. 147
2. 80
3. 333
4. 325
5. 86.4
6. 9
7. 12
8. 41
9. 96.8
10. 38

Case II. Given the base and the percentage, to find the rate. Rule: Divide the percentage by the base.

Example

17 is what per cent of 29?
$^{17}/_{29}$ = .58$^{18}/_{29}$ = 58$^{18}/_{29}$%

Exercise

1. 25 is what per cent of 800?
2. 16 is what per cent of 280?
3. 180 is what per cent of 36,000?
4. 17.5 is what per cent of 85.6?
5. 18.4 is what per cent of 2.86?

Answers:
1. 3⅛%
2. 5$^{5}/_{7}$%
3. ½% or .5%
4. 20$^{95}/_{214}$%
5. 643$^{51}/_{143}$%

Case III. Given the percentage and rate, to find the base. This is called the indirect case. Rule: Percentage divided by rate equals the base.

Example

18 is 3% of what number?
18 ÷ .03 = 600, Answer

Exercise

1. 25 is 20% of what number?
2. 180 is 50% of what number?
3. 27 is 75% of what number?
4. 260 is 80% of what number?
5. 1704 is 12% of what number?

Answers:
1. 125
2. 360
3. 36
4. 325
5. 14,200

Aliquot Parts

Arithmetical calculations may be made much easier if the aliquot parts of 100% are used. By an aliquot part is meant a number which can be divided into another number so that the answer will be a whole number. Thus 25% is an aliquot part of 100% because 100% divided by 25% equals 4. It would be well to memorize the aliquot parts of 100%, and multiples of these aliquot parts for greater ease and speed in performing problems.

Aliquot Parts of 100%

50% = ½	87½% = ⅞	70% = 7/10
25% = ¼	1% = 1/100	80% = ⅘
75% = ¾	10% = 1/10	33⅓% = ⅓
6¼% = 1/16	20% = ⅕	66⅔% = ⅔
12½% = ⅛	30% = 3/10	16⅔% = ⅙
37½% = ⅜	40% = ⅖	8⅓% = 1/12
62½% = ⅝	60% = ⅗	83⅓% = ⅚

Example

Find 37½% of 800.
⅜ of 800 = 300, Answer

Exercise

Compute the following, using aliquot parts:

1. 20% of 850
2. 87½% of 864
3. 12½% of 960
4. 75% of 1200
5. 33⅓% of 963
6. 10% of 786
7. 16⅔% of 282
8. 66⅔% of 1296
9. 80% of 9000
10. 8⅓% of 2460
11. 83⅓% of 288
12. 62½% of 1200

15. 950

Aliquot Parts of $1.00

It will be noticed that the aliquot parts of $1.00 are the same as those of 100%. Therefore the same fractional equivalents may be used at all times.

Example

Find cost of 840 yards of silks @ 62½¢ per yd.
62½ = ⅝
⅝ of 840 = 525, Answer

Exercise

Compute the following, using aliquot parts:

1. 160 yds. @ 50¢
2. 980 yds. @ 10¢
3. 750 yds. @ 40¢
4. 138 lbs. @ 33⅓¢
5. 280 lbs. @ 62½¢
6. 1780 lbs. @ 60¢
7. 66⅔ lbs. @ 90¢
8. 16⅔ lbs. @ 48¢
9. 75 yds. @ 88¢
10. 40 yds. @ $2.50
11. 270 lbs. @ 66⅔¢
12. 726 ft. @ 16⅔¢
13. 6480 yds. @ 62½¢
14. 22½ lbs. @ 40¢
15. 256 ft. @ 6¼¢

In problems 7 to 10, the base and the rate may be interchanged so that problem 7 will read 90 lbs. @ 66⅔¢ and will be done in the same manner as problems 1 to 6.

Discounts on Invoices

Invoices and Terms

After a sale is made, the seller sends an invoice to the buyer. On it is listed the date, terms, goods and quantity sold, the price of each item, the extensions, and the total. The terms are most important because they are the conditions of payment. Some examples of terms are:

C.O.D.—Collect or cash on delivery.
Cash—Cash is to be paid on the date of the sale.
On account—Payment to be made within a reasonable time after the end of the month.
E.O.M.—End of the month.
n/30—Net 30 days after the date of the invoice (net means no discounts).
2/10 n/30—2% discount if paid within 10 days after the date of the invoice, net after 10 days and within 30 days.
2/5 1/15 n/30—2% discount if paid within 5 days, 1% discount if paid after 5 days but within 15 days; net if paid after 15 days and within 30 days.

Trade and Cash Discounts

Discounts on invoices are of two kinds, cash discounts and trade discounts. Cash discounts are those mentioned under terms, an inducement to the customer to pay his bill ahead of time. The customer is the one who decides whether he will take advantage of the discount. Trade discounts differ from cash discounts because they are deducted, not by the customer, but by the seller.

Manufacturers and wholesalers print catalogues once or twice a year. They are expensive. In order to bring the catalogue price down to the market price, they send their customers discount sheets, on which they list discounts given on the catalogue price to bring it down to the market price. If the price drops, two or more trade discounts may be given.

Problem 1: The Rowe Co. offers to sell a dining room suite for $250 less 20%, 10%, and 10%. The Wilson Co. offers a similar suite for $260 less 40%. Which is the better offer and by how much?

Rowe Co.

$250	List Price or Catalogue Price
50	Trade Discount 20%
$200	Balance
20	Trade Discount 10%
$180	Balance
18	Trade Discount 10%
$162	Net Cost

Wilson Co.

$260	List Price
140	Trade Discount 40%
$156	Net Cost
$162	Net Cost—Rowe Co.
156	Net Cost—Wilson Co.
$6	Wilson Co. offer better.

Problem 2: The Domestic Rug Co. received an invoice on November 10 amounting to $1280 less 20%, and 5%, terms 3/10 n/60. The invoice was paid November 20. Find the amount of the payment.

$1280.00	List Price
256.00	Trade Discount 20%
$1024.00	Balance
51.20	Trade Discount 5% (½ of 10%)
$ 972.80	Balance
29.18	Cash Discount 3%
$ 943.62	Net Cost

Problem 3: A dealer purchased a bicycle for $32.40 less 33⅓%, terms 2/10 n/30, plus a freight charge of 90¢. The invoice was dated March 15 and paid March 25. Find the amount of the payment.

$32.40	List Price
10.80	Trade Discount 33⅓%
$21.60	Balance
.43	Cash Discount 2%
$21.17	Net Cost
.90	Freight Charge
$22.07	Total Cost

Note: The discounts are taken only on the invoice; they cannot be taken on the freight charge or any other buying expense.

Exercise

1. Find net cost of invoice of $1375 less 20% and 10%.
2. Find total cost of invoice of $45 less 20% and buying expense of $2.10.
3. Find net cost of invoice dated April 16, terms 2/10 n/30, amounting to $1500 less 20% and 10% and paid on April 26.
4. A dealer offeres a rug for $60 less 30% and 10%. Another offers the same quality for $60 less 40%. Which offer is better and how much?

Answers:

1. $990	3. $1058.40
2. $38.10	4. Second offer by $1.80

Single Discount Equivalent to a Series of Trade Discounts

For ease in computation and for purposes of comparison, it is often desirable to find one discount that is equivalent to a series. The procedure is as follows: Consider the catalogue price as 100%. Multiply this by the first discount and subtract from 100%. Multiply this difference or balance by the second discount and subtract the answer from the balance. Continue this multiplication and subtraction until all the discounts have been taken. The answer will be the net cost. To find the single discount, subtract the net cost from 100%.

Problem: Find one discount equivalent to a series of 30%, 20% and 10%.

100%	List Price
30	Trade Discount 30%
70%	Balance
14	Trade Discount 20% (20% of 70%)
56.0%	Balance
5.6	Trade Discount 10% (10% of 56%)
50.4	Net Cost

100% List Price − 50.4% Net Cost = 49.6%, Ans.
Proof: 30% + 14% + 5.6% = 49.6%, Answer

Exercise

Find one discount equivalent to the following series:

1. 20% and 10%
2. 30% and 10%
3. 50% and 20%
4. 25% and 20%
5. 37½% and 24%
6. 20%, 10%, and 5%
7. 20%, 10%, and 10%
8. 50%, 25%, and 20%
9. 40%, 30%, 20%, and 10%
10. 50%, 25%, and 10%

Answers:
1. 28%
2. 37%
3. 60%
4. 40%
5. 52½%
6. 31.6%
7. 35.2%
8. 70%
9. 69.76%
10. 66.25%

Commissions

Salesmen are usually paid a percentage of their sales as compensation for their work. This percentage is called commission. Commissions are generally paid on the amount of the sales, although in some cases they are calculated on the quantity of merchandise sold. When a salesman is paid commission only, he is on a straight commission basis. If he receives a drawing account, the amount of the drawings is deducted from his total commission at the end of the accounting period, and the balance paid him at that time.

To encourage salesmen to greater efforts, commission may be paid on a graduated basis; that is for example, 10% commission on the first $20,000 of sales and 15% on all sales over $20,000. Inside salesmen are usually paid on a commission and salary basis. Very often, no commission is paid until a stated amount or quota has been sold; commission is then paid on sales over the quota. The problems that follow deal with each of these phases of selling.

Straight Commission

Problem 1: A salesman sells 2500 yards of silk at $2 per yard. His rate of commission is 2½%. Find his commission.

2500 × $2 = $5000, Sales
2½% of $5000 = $125, Commission

Problem 2: A salesman sells 2500 yards of silk at $2 per yard. His rate of commission is 5¢ per yard. Find his commission.

2500 yards × 5¢ = $125, Commission

Note that in the first problem the commission was based on price whereas in the second problem it was based on quantity.

Salary and Commission

Problem: A salesman is offered a salary of $50 per week and a commission of 5% on all sales. His sales for the year are $36,000. Find his yearly earnings.

Time	Sales	5% Commission	Salary	Total
1 year	$36,000	$1800	$2600 (52 × $50)	$4400 Answer

Salary, Commission, and Quota

Problem: A salesman is offered a salary of $110 per month and a 6% commission on all sales over $2000 per month. In April, his sales were $1950; in May, $3250; in June, $3375. Find his total earnings.

Time	Salary	Sales	Quota Over $2000	6% Commission	Totals
April	$110	$1950	$ 0	$ 0	$110.00
May	110	3250	1250	75.00	185.00
June	110	3375	1375	82.50	192.50
Totals	$330	$8575	$2625	$157.50	$487.50 Answer

To check the answer, add the vertical totals, then the horizontal totals. The grand total must be the same.
Thus, vertically, 110 + 185 + 192.50 = 487.50 horizontally, 330 + 157.50 = 487.50

Salary, Graduated Commission, and Quota

Problem: Noll, a salesman, receives a salary of $200 per month, 1% commission on all sales, and 2% commission on all monthly sales over $3000. In January his sales were $6000; in February, $4500; in March, $7400. Find his total income for the three months.

Salary, Graduated Commission, and Quota Problem Table

Time	Salary	Sales	On All Sales Com. 1%	Quota Over $3000	Over $3000 Com. 2%	Totals
January	$200	$ 6000	$ 60	$3000	$ 60	$320
February	200	4500	45	1500	30	275
March	200	7400	74	4400	88	362
Totals	$600	$17,900	$179	$8900	$178	$957 Answer

To check the answer of the problem just solved, add the horizontal totals:

$$600 + 179 + 178 = 957.$$

Exercise

In doing these problems use the diagram method of the previous problems. The headings can be found very easily by reading the problem carefully and then heading each column as the problem indicates.

1. Find the commission a salesman receives if his sales are $6500 and the commission is 7%.
2. John Miller, a salesman, receives a monthly salary of $90 and 5% commission on all sales. In addition, he receives 2% on sales over $3000 in any single month. His sales in April were $3850 and in May $2700. Find his total earnings.
3. A salesman has offers of employment from two firms. Kolapep offers him a salary of $100 per month, a commission of 5% in total monthly sales and 2% additional commission on monthly sales in excess of $2000. Cocapep offers him a commission of 8% on the first $1000 of monthly sales, 10% on the next $1000 of monthly sales and 12% on all monthly sales in excess of $2000. If his average sales are $3500 a month, where would he earn more and how much more?
4. The Electric Supply Co. has an agency for the sale of vacuum cleaners. Their commission is $12.50 each for the first 50 cleaners; $15 each for the second 50 cleaners or part thereof; $17.50 each for all over 100 cleaners sold each month. In May, they sold 76 cleaners; in June, they sold 105 cleaners. Find their commission.

Answers:

1. $455
2. $524.50
3. Cocapep is better by $55
4. $2477.50

Commission Merchants

For those people who cannot do their own buying or selling, agents known as commission merchants will attend to all such transactions. They charge a commission for their services, in the same manner as do salesmen. After selling the merchandise, they submit a statement called an account sales. After buying the merchandise, they submit a statement called an account purchase.

Problem 1: Williams has 860 bushels of potatoes to sell. He can sell them at $2.10 a bushel, with no expense. However, he sends them to a commission merchant who sells 450 bushels at $2.60 and the remainder at $2.25 a bushel. The merchant charges 3¢ a bushel for storage, $36.80 for freight, 1% for insurance, and 3% commission.

A. Find the amount of the net proceeds remitted to Williams.

B. How much does Williams gain or lose by having the merchant sell the potatoes?

A.

Income

450 bu. @ $2.60	$1170.00
410 bu. @ $2.25	922.50
Total Proceeds		$2092.50

Charges

Storage (3¢ per bu., 860 bu.)	$25.80
Freight	36.80
Insurance (1% of $2092.50)	20.93
Commission (3% of $2092.50)	62.78
Total Charges		$ 146.31
Net Proceeds		$1946.19

B. 860 bu. @ $2.10 = $1806, Total Proceeds

$1946.19, Net Proceeds—Commission Merchant
1806.00, Total Proceeds
$ 140.19, Gain by sending to commission merchant

Note: All charges or expenses must be subtracted on a sale.

Problem 2: Benton, a sugar broker, purchases 35,000 pounds of sugar for a candy manufacturer at 5.5¢ per pound. Benton's expenses and charges are: handling $23.40, freight 36¢ per hundredweight, commission 5%. Find the total cost of the sugar to the candy manufacturer.

35,000 lbs. sugar @ 5.5¢ per lb. = $1925, Cost

Charges

Handling	$ 23.40
Freight (36¢ per cwt.—35,000 lbs.	126.00
Commission (5% of $1925)	96.25
Total Charges		$ 245.65
Total Cost		$2170.65

Note: All charges and expenses must be added on a purchase.

Exercise

1. Wilson, a commission merchant, receives 1500 bushels of potatoes to sell. He sold 635 bushels at $1.50; 475 bushels at $1.40; and the remainder at $1.30 a bushel. He charged a commission of 5%. His expenses were: freight charges $84.50, sorting and weighing $38.40, and storage charges of 3¢ per bushel. Find the net proceeds.
2. Harris purchased 50,000 feet of lumber for a builder at $60 per 1000 feet. Freight charges were $150, insurance 1%, trucking $75 and commission 4%. Find the total cost of the lumber to the builder.

3. A fruit farm shipped 100 crates (32 boxes per crate) of strawberries to a commission merchant. He sold 1280 boxes at $.20, 960 boxes at $.15 and the remainder at $.12 per box. Freight charges were $24, storage $22.66, cartage $15.60, commission 5%. Find the net proceeds.

Payrolls

Time Basis

Employees other than salesmen are usually paid on a time basis. So-called white-collar workers such as clerks, bookkeepers, and the like are paid on an annual, monthly, or weekly salary basis. Other workers, especially those who do manual labor, are paid on an hourly basis, with forty hours per week generally regarded as regular time, and everything over forty hours as overtime. In many organizations each employee has a time card on which an accurate record of his time may be kept.

Problem 1: Below is the time card of a worker showing the time he has worked for one week. His regular wage is $1.10 per hour for a 40 hour week.

Day	In	Out	In	Out
Monday	7:00	12:00	1:00	4:00
Tuesday	7:00	12:00	1:00	4:00
Wednesday	7:00	12:00	1:00	4:00
Thursday	7:00	12:00	1:00	4:00
Friday	7:00	12:00	1:00	4:00

A. Find his total wages for the week.
B. His employer deducts 3% for social security and $6.38 for withholding tax. What is his take-home pay?

A.

Day	Hours
Monday	8
Tuesday	8
Wednesday	8
Thursday	8
Friday	8
Total	40 × 1.10 $44.00, Total Wages

B. Total wages $44.00

Deductions
Social Security (3%) $1.32
Withholding Tax 6.38
Take-home pay $36.30

Problem 2: A mechanic is working in a factory where his regular time is 40 hours a week. He is paid time and a half (1½ times) for overtime. His regular wages are $1.50 per hour. Deductions are 3% for social security and $14.25 for withholding tax. Last week he worked 57 hours.

A. Find his total earnings.
B. Find his take-home pay.

A.

Total Time (Hours)	Regular Time (Hours)	1½ Over-Time (Hours)*
57	40	17 × 1½ 8½ 17 25½

40 Regular Allowance
25½ Overtime Allowance

$98.25, Total Wages

B. Total wages $98.25

Deductions
Social Security (3%) ..... $ 2.95
Withholding Tax 14.25
Take-home pay $81.05

Exercise

1. William Randall, a machinist, worked last week as follows: Monday 8 hours, Tuesday 10 hours, Wednesday 11 hours, Thursday 9 hours, Friday 10 hours and Saturday 5 hours. His regular time is 40 hours per week, with time and a half for overtime. His hourly rate is $1.60 per hour. Deductions of 3% for social security taxes and $13.81 for withholding taxes are made.
a. Find his total wages.
b. Find his take-home pay.

2. Hawkins, a mechanic, worked 47 hours last week. His regular time is 40 hours with time and a half for overtime. His hourly rate is $1.40 per hour. Social security tax deduction was 3% and withholding tax was $11.67.
a. Find his total wages.
b. Find his take-home pay.

Answers:
1. a. $95.20 b. $78.53 2. a. $70.70 b. $56.91

Piecework Wages

Another method of compensation depends not on the time worked but on the quantity or pieces which the worker produces. The wage is computed by multiplying the number of pieces by the rate per piece.

Problem: Harris, a dress operator, produces 108 pieces of work during the week. His rate per piece is 35¢. Find his total wages.

$108 \times .35 = $37.80$, Total Wages

Deductions for social security and withholding tax are computed in the same manner as in time wages.

Averages

By an average is meant a figure which is typical of a group of numbers. Averages are useful in comparing groups of numbers. To find an average, add all the items and divide the total by the number of items.

Problem 1: A salesman's sales per week are $1500, $2000, $3000, $6000, and $2500. Find his average sales for the five weeks.

3000 6000
2500

Problem 2: Clark's average sales for the last 8 weeks of the year were $362.15 a week. For the first 3 weeks of the new year, his sales per week were $415.16, $523.25, and $392.35. Find his average sales per week for the 11 weeks.

$362.15 × 8 = $2897.20, Total sales for 8 weeks
415.16
523.25
392.35
$4227.96, Total sales for 11 weeks

$4227.96 ÷ 11 = $384.36, Average sales per week for 11 weeks

Exercise

1. The Acme Sales Co. had a contest for its salesmen. Potter's average sales for the last 8 weeks of the year were $340. For the first 4 weeks of the new year, his weekly sales were $376, $625, $429, and $374. Find his average weekly sales for the 12 weeks.
2. In the same contest, Wolcott's sales for the last 6 weeks averaged $425. For the first 4 weeks of the new year, his weekly sales were $500, $735, $658, and $695. Find his average weekly sales for the 10 weeks.

Simple Interest

Basic Method of Calculation

Interest is the charge made for the use of money for a specified time. The money used is called the principal. The per cent is called the rate. The rule for calculating interest is:

Principal × Rate × Time = Interest

Problem 1: Find the interest on $600 for 1 year at 6%.

$600 × 6/100 × 1 = $36, Interest

Problem 2: Find the interest on $1200 for 90 days at 4%.

$1200 × 4/100 × 90/360 = $12, Interest

Note that for purposes of easier and faster computation the year is considered to have 360 days, and each month, regardless of how many days it actually has, is considered to have only 30 days.

Exercise

Find the interest:

	Principal	Time	Rate %	Rate %	Rate %
1.	$1600	6 months	6	4	3
2.	1200	3 months	6	3	2
3.	2400	2 months	6	5	3
4.	720	60 days	6	1	4
5.	840	80 days	6	1	2
6.	480	40 days	6	5	4
7.	220	120 days	6	3	2
8.	180	9 months	6	8	4½
9.	2800	8 months	6	2	3
10.	960	30 days	6	4	3

Answers:

1.	$ 48	$32	$24
2.	18	9	6
3.	24	20	12
4.	7.20	1.20	4.80
5.	11.20	1.87	3.73
6.	3.20	2.67	2.13
7.	4.40	2.20	1.47
8.	8.10	10.80	6.08
9.	112	37.33	56
10.	4.80	3.20	2.40

The Sixty-Day Method

To find interest on sums of money when the time is less than a year, the sixty-day method is used. This method is based upon the fact that 60 days (2 months) are 1/6 of one year. Therefore, if the annual interest rate is 6%, the interest charge for 60 days is 1/6 of 6% or 1%. Rule: To find the interest on any sum of money for 60 days (2 months) take 1% of that amount.

Problem 1: Find the interest on $1200 for 60 days at 6%.

1% of $1200 = $12.00, Interest for 60 days
Proof: $1200 × 6/100 × 60/360 = $12.

Finding the interest for 60 days is the basis for computing interest for other periods of time. For example, the interest for 30 days is half of that for 60 days; for 15 days, a quarter; for 10 days, a sixth, etc.

Problem 2: Find the interest on $1200 at 6% for the days shown below:

Interest on $1200 for 60 days at 6% = $12.00
Interest for 30 days (½ of 60) = 6.00
Interest for 20 days (⅓ of 60) = 4.00
Interest for 15 days (¼ of 60) = 3.00
Interest for 12 days (⅕ of 60) = 2.40
Interest for 10 days (1/6 of 60) = 2.00
Interest for 6 days (1/10 of 60) = 1.20

From this point, it is easy to find the interest for any number of days. Always find the interest for 60 days first. That is the base. Then, break up the days for which the interest is to be calculated into aliquot parts of 60 and add the interest for those days. The following illustrations will show just what is to be done:

Problem 3: Find the interest on $1800 for 90 days at 6%.

90 = 60 + 30.

Interest on $1800 for 60 days at 6% = $18
Interest on $1800 for 30 days at 6% = 9
Interest on $1800 for 90 days at 6% = $27

Problem 4: Find the interest on $1500 for 47 days at 6%.

A. 47 = 20 + 20 + 6 + 1
or
B. 47 = 30 + 15 + 2.

A.

Interest on $1500 for 60 days at 6% =	$15.00
Interest on $1500 for 20 days at 6% =	$5.00
Interest on $1500 for 20 days at 6% =	5.00
Interest on $1500 for 6 days at 6% =	1.50
Interest on $1500 for 1 day at 6% =	.25
Interest on $1500 for 47 days at 6% =	$11.75

B.

Interest on $1500 for 60 days at 6% =	$15.00
Interest on $1500 for 30 days at 6% =	$7.50
Interest on $1500 for 15 days at 6% =	3.75
Interest on $1500 for 2 days at 6% =	.50
Interest on $1500 for 47 days at 6% =	$11.75

Problem 5: Find the interest on $270 for 56 days at 6%.

A. 56 = 30 + 20 + 6.
or
B. 56 = 20 + 20 + 12 + 4.
or
C. 56 = 60 − 4.

A.

Interest on $270 for 60 days at 6% =	$2.70
Interest on $270 for 30 days at 6% =	$1.35
Interest on $270 for 20 days at 6% =	.90
Interest on $270 for 6 days at 6% =	.27
Interest on $270 for 56 days at 6% =	$2.52

B.

Interest on $270 for 60 days at 6% =	$2.70
Interest on $270 for 20 days at 6% =	$ .90
Interest on $270 for 20 days at 6% =	.90
Interest on $270 for 12 days at 6% =	.54
Interest on $270 for 4 days at 6% =	.18
Interest on $270 for 56 days at 6% =	$2.52

C.

Interest on $270 for 60 days at 6% =	$2.70
Interest on $270 for 4 days at 6% =	.18
Interest on $270 for 56 days at 6% =	$2.52

Note that it is also possible to use aliquot parts of the other numbers besides 60 as well. Thus in Problem 4*a*, 1 day is ⅙ of 6 days. Therefore ⅙ of $1.50 = $.25. In Problem 5*b*, 4 days are ⅕ of 20 days or ⅓ of 12 days. The interest can be computed by taking ⅕ of $.90 or ⅓ of $.54, the answer in each case being $.18.

Exercise

Find the interest:

	Principal	Time	Rate %
1.	$1600	80 days	6
2.	1800	3 months	6
3.	1200	75 days	6
4.	4000	46 days	6
5.	280	23 days	6
6.	970	38 days	6

To Find the Interest at 6% for Any Time in Days

Frequently the number of days in an interest problem cannot easily be divided into aliquot parts of 60, such as 29 days, 71 days, etc. In such cases another method may be used, as follows:

Rule:

1. Divide the principal by 1000.
2. Multiply the result by the number of days.
3. Divide the product by 6.

Problem: Find the interest on $150 for 29 days at 6%.

$$\frac{$150}{1000} = $.150$$

$$\begin{array}{r} $.150 \\ \underline{\quad\quad 29} \\ 1350 \\ \underline{\quad 300} \\ 6\,)\,4350 \\ .725 \end{array} \quad \textit{Answer}$$

The answer arrived at by this method may be checked by the first method:

Interest on $150 for 60 days at 6% =	$1.50
Interest on $150 for 30 days at 6% =	$.75
Interest on $150 for 1 day at 6% =	$.025
Interest on $150 for 31 days at 6% =	.775
Interest on $150 for 29 days at 6% =	$ .725 or $.73

Exercise

Do the examples in the preceding exercise, but use the above method.

To Find the Interest at Rates Other Than 6%

Rule:

1. Find the interest at 6%.
2. Multiply the answer by the desired rate.
3. Divide by 6.

Problem: Find the interest on $800 for 37 days at 4½%.

A.

Interest on $800 for 60 days at 6% =	$8.00
Interest on $800 for 30 days at 6% =	$4.00
Interest on $800 for 6 days at 6% =	.80
Interest on $800 for 1 day at 6% =	.133
Interest on $800 for 37 days at 6% =	$4.933

B.

$$\begin{array}{r} $4.933 \\ \underline{\quad 4\tfrac{1}{2}} \\ $22.1985 \end{array}$$

C.

$$6\,)\,22.1985$$

3.6997½ or $3.70, Answer

Another method may also be used. For 5% take ⅚ of the answer; for 4%, ⅔ (or ⅘); for 3%, ½ (or ⅗); for 2%, ⅓ (or ⅖) and for 1%, ⅙. Whichever method is used is a matter of one's own preference.

Bank Discount

Discounting One's Own Notes

When a businessman needs money, he borrows it at the bank. In return he will give the bank his written promise to repay the money at a certain time. This written promise is called a promissory note. The bank will charge interest on the loan which it will deduct in advance, giving the borrower the difference between the value of the note at maturity and the interest. This difference is called the net proceeds. When interest is deducted in advance, it is called bank discount, and the rate is called the rate of bank discount.

In order to find how much a borrower will actually receive on a loan, calculate the interest and subtract the amount from the principal.

Problem: A businessman borrows $1500 from a bank on his 60-day note at a discount rate of 6%. Find the net proceeds.

Interest on $1500
for 60 days at 6% = $15, Bank Discount

$1500 Maturity Value

Discounting Others' Notes

Frequently, a businessman who is in need of money has customers' notes and acceptances on hand. He may borrow on these.

Problem 1: Harry Williams has received a note of $600 from a customer. It is dated April 15 and runs for 90 days. On May 12, he needs money. He sells it to the bank or, to use the correct business term, he discounts the note. What are the net proceeds?

To do this problem, four steps must be performed.

1. Find the day the note is due (date of maturity).
2. Find how long the bank must wait for payment (term of discount).
3. Find the bank discount.
4. Find the net proceeds.

Bank Discount

$6.30 for 63 days (By previously indicated method)

Net Proceeds

$600.00 Maturity Value
6.30 Bank Discount
$593.70 Net Proceeds

Note that in finding the date of maturity and the term of discount, the actual number of days is used.

Explanation of the Solution:

1. Date of Maturity. The date of maturity is 90 days from April 15. There are 30 days in April; 15 days have already passed, so we have 15 days left in April. In May there are 31, in June, 30 days. This gives us 76 days, leaving 14 more to make up the 90. We reach, then, July 14.
2. Term of Discount. Counting from the date the note was discounted, May 12, to the date of maturity, July 14, there are 63 days.
3. Bank Discount. The bank discount is found by finding the interest for the term of discount, 63 days.
4. Net Proceeds. Net proceeds are found by deducting the bank discount from the value at maturity.

When the time of the note is not in days, but in months, the date of maturity is found by counting months, and not days.

Problem 2: Find the net proceeds of a note of $1500, dated July 16, time 3 months, and discounted August 31.

Discounting Interest-Bearing Notes

The face value and the maturity value of a non-interest-bearing note are the same. In the case of an interest-bearing note, the face value and maturity value differ, because the interest must be added to the face value to arrive at the maturity value.

Problem 1: Find the maturity value of a 60-day note of $800 bearing interest at 3%.

Interest = $4

$800 Face Value
4 Interest
$804 Maturity Value

To discount an interest-bearing note, the maturity value must be found, because the bank discount is computed on the maturity value, not the face value.

Problem 2: Find the net proceeds of a 60-day note of $1200, bearing interest at 4%, dated January 18 and discounted February 13.

Date of Maturity

Jan. 31

Interest and Maturity Value

Bank Discount

$6.85 for 34 days (By previously indicated method)

Net Proceeds

$1209.00 Maturity Value
6.85 Bank Discount
$1202.15 Net Proceeds

Note that there is a new step in this solution; namely, finding the maturity value. Otherwise the solution is the same as in the non-interest-bearing notes.

Borrowing Money to Pay a Bill

A firm may buy goods and the discount for cash may be so great that it will be worthwhile borrowing the money to be able to take advantage of the discount. It is important, then, to be able to figure out how much can be gained by borrowing to pay for cash, and, also, whether it is actually worthwhile to do so.

Problem: On April 3, F. B. Clark bought goods for $1500, terms 2/10, n/30. He did not have the money to pay the invoice on April 13, so that he could take advantage of the discount. He therefore borrowed sufficient money to pay the bill on his 20-day interest-bearing note. Did he gain or lose and how much?

$1500 Amount of Invoice
30 Cash discount 2%
$1470 Net Cost
Interest on $1470 for 20 days at 6% = $4.90
$30.00 Cash Discount
4.90 Interest
$25.10 Gain by borrowing

Note that he must borrow the amount of the net cost.

Exercise

1. A merchant bought goods for $3640, terms 3/10, n/90. To take advantage of the cash discount, he borrowed the money for 80 days at 6% and paid the bill. How much was gained by borrowing the money?
2. A merchant purchased goods for $1500 less 20% and 10%, terms 2/10, n/30. To take advantage of the cash discount, he borrowed the money for 20 days at 6% and paid the bill. How much was gained by borrowing?
3. The Hudson Co. bought goods for $2480 less 25%, terms 2/10, n/60. To take advantage of the cash discount, they borrowed the money at 6% for 50 days. How much was gained by borrowing?

Borrowing Money for Loan Companies

Small-loan companies are permitted by law to lend money, usually up to $300, and charge a stated rate per cent of interest on the unpaid balance. Payments on such loans are generally made in monthly installments.

Problem: A man borrows $300 from a finance company. The company charges 2% interest per month on the unpaid balance. Payments of $50 are to be made monthly. The loan is for 6 months. Find the total amount of interest paid.

Interest Period	Unpaid Balance	Interest at 2%	Payment
End of first month	$300	$6.00	$50
End of second month	250	5.00	50
End of third month	200	4.00	50
End of fourth month	150	3.00	50
End of fifth month	100	2.00	50
End of sixth month	50	1.00	50
Total Interest		$21.00

Note that the interest is computed on the amount due at the end of each month. The unpaid balance at the end of the first month is $300 so the interest at 2% of $300 is $6. At the end of the next month the unpaid balance, reduced by $50, is $250, and the interest is $5, etc.

Problem: A man borrows $200 for 4 months. The interest charges are 2½% on the first $100, 2% on the balance. Find the interest charges.

Interest Period	Unpaid Balance	Interest Charges	Payment
End of first month	$200	$4.50	$50
End of second month	150	3.50	50
End of third month	100	2.50	50
End of fourth month	50	1.25	50
Total Interest		$11.75

Computation:
2½% of $100 = $2.50; 2% of $100 = $2.00; Total $4.50
2½% of $100 = $2.50; 2% of $ 50 = $1.00; Total $3.50
2½% of $100 = $2.50
2½% of $50 = $1.25

Exercise

1. Gates borrows $240 from a credit union for 5 months. He repays the loan in five monthly installments of $48 each, plus interest charges of ¾% per month on the unpaid balance. Find the interest charges.
2. Brown borrows $150 from a finance company and will repay it in 5 monthly installments of $30 each. The company charges 2½% on the first $100, 2% on the balance. Find the interest charges.
3. Aarons borrows $150 from a finance company and will repay it in 6 monthly installments of $25 each. The company charges 2% on the unpaid balance. Find the interest charges.

Compound Interest

Compound interest is interest which has been added to the principal, to form a part of the new principal. For example, if Brown deposits $100 in a savings bank and at the end of the year he is credited with 2% interest, his new principal is $102. At the end of the next year, the bank will compute the interest upon $102. If this is done each year, the interest is compounded annually. Banks add interest at stated periods, such as at the end of a month, quarter year, half year, or year, and interest is said to be compounded monthly, quarterly, semi-annually, or annually. Banks use compound-interest tables to compute the compound interest. Below, it will be computed arithmetically. Interest is not computed on cents, but on dollars only.

Problem: On January 2, 1943, Clark deposited $500 in a savings bank. Interest at the rate of 2% per annum was compounded semi-annually. On January 2, 1944, Clark deposited an additional $400. Find how much he had on deposit July 1, 1944.

$500.00	Principal Jan. 2, 1943
5.00	Interest July 1, 1943 (2% per year, 1% for ½ year)
$505.00	Principal July 1, 1943
5.05	Interest Jan. 2, 1944
$510.05	Principal Jan. 2, 1944
400.00	Deposit Jan. 2, 1944
$910.05	Principal Jan. 2, 1944
9.10	Interest July 1, 1944
$919.15	Principal July 1, 1944

Note that interest is computed and added before deposits are added or withdrawals deducted.

Exercise

1. A savings bank pays 2% interest on its deposits and adds the interest on June 1 and December 1 of each year. On June 1, 1944 H. Williams deposits $600. If he makes no deposits or withdrawals, how much will he have on deposit December 1, 1945?
2. A savings bank pays 1½% interest on its deposits and adds the interest on January 2 and July 1 of each year. On January 2, 1943 W. Harris deposits $600. He deposits $400 on July 1, 1943 and withdraws $100 on January 2, 1944. How much will he have on deposit July 1, 1944?

Profits and Pricing

Per Cent of Profit

Businessmen, in order to stay in business, must operate at a profit. To do so, it is imperative that they have certain information on their operations. This information will be considered here.

Per Cent of Profit on Cost

The selling price of goods less the cost of goods is the entire or gross profit. The gross profit less the overhead is the net profit. By overhead is meant the expenses or cost of doing business, such as rent, salaries, supplies, etc. What the businessman wants to know very often is whether he is making a big enough profit in comparison to his cost.

Problem: Goods costing $500 are sold for $800. The overhead is $100. Find A. rate of gross profit on cost; B. rate of net profit on cost.

$800 Selling Price
500 Cost
$300 Gross Profit
100 Overhead
$200 Net Profit

A. $^{300}/_{500}$ = 60%, Rate of Gross Profit on Cost
B. $^{200}/_{500}$ = 40%, Rate of Net Profit on Cost

Per Cent of Profit on Sales

Many businessmen prefer to base their profit on sales and not on cost. The reasons are that the sales price is known at once whereas the cost must be looked up and because expenses and profits are compared with sales.

Problem: Goods costing $500 are sold for $800. The overhead is $100. Find A. rate of gross profit on sales; B. rate of net profit on sales.

$800 Selling Price
500 Cost
$300 Gross Profit
100 Overhead
$200 Net Profit

A. $^{300}/_{800}$ = 37½%, Rate of Gross Profit on Sales
B. $^{200}/_{800}$ = 25%, Rate of Net Profit on Sales

Finding the Selling Price, Given the Cost and Per Cent of Profit on Sales

Here the rate of profit is figured on sales and not on cost. The procedure in finding the sales price differs because an indirect method is used.

Problem: A refrigerator is billed to a dealer at $75 less 20% and 10%. At what price should he sell the refrigerator to gain 20% of the sales price?

$75 List Price
15 Trade Discount 20%
$60 Balance
6 Trade Discount 10%
$54 Net Cost

Sales Price	100%
Profit	20%
Cost		$54

Sales Price	100%	$67.50
Profit	20%	$13.50
Cost	80%	$54.00

$54 ÷ .8 = $67.50 or $54 ÷ ⅘ = $54 × ⅝ = $67.50, Answer

To prove, take 20% of the sales, $67.50. The profit is $13.50. Sales, $67.50, minus Profit, $13.50, equal $54, Cost.

In this type of problem, the unknown is the sales price. This is 100%. The profit on sales is known to be 20% of 100%, or 20%. The cost is known to be $54. Now, subtract 20% from 100% to get the cost: 80%. The cost also equals $54. The problem now is: $54 is 80% of what number? As done in Percentage, Percentage ÷ Rate = Base or 54 ÷ .8.

Finding the Selling Price, Given the Cost, the Per Cent of Profit and Overhead Based on Selling Price

Problem: A refrigerator is billed to a dealer at $75 less 20% and 10%. At what price should he sell the refrigerator to gain 20% on sales, if he gives his salesman a commission of 8% on sales and his overhead is 12% of sales?

$75 List Price

Cost		60%	$54

$54 ÷ .6 = 90 or
$54 ÷ 3/5 = 54 × 5/3 = $90, Answer

The procedure followed is as in the previous problem. Everything based on sales is placed in the middle of the diagram, totaled, and subtracted from the sales, 100%. The difference is the cost. The problem is the same as before: the net cost is a certain percentage of what number? Prove as before.

2. A druggist buys face powder at 50¢ per box. The wholesaler offers the druggist a discount of 10% and 5%, if he will buy a carton (36 boxes). The druggist accepts. At what price must he mark each box to make a profit of 33⅓% on cost?
3. A dealer buys radios at $150 less 20% and 10%. He has an expense of $6 per radio for delivery and installation. (This is a selling expense and must be added to sales price to get total sales price.)
   a. At what price must he sell each radio to gain 25% on the purchase price?
   b. At what price must he sell each radio to gain 25% on the sales price?
4. A dealer buys fountain pens at $36 per dozen less 25% and 20%. The overhead is 25% of sales. At what price must he sell each pen to gain 15% on the sales price?
5. In 1944 the Brown Rug Co. determined its sales price by basing the gross profit of 40% on cost. In 1945, the company decided to base the 40% gross profit on sales price.
   a. If a rug cost $6, what was the sales price in 1944?
   b. If the cost of the rug was $6 in 1945, what was the sales price in 1945?
   c. By what per cent was the gross profit decreased or increased in 1945 as compared with 1944.

Find the List or Marked Price, Given the Selling Price and the Trade Discount

Wholesalers who sell their goods subject to a trade discount must be able to compute the list or catalogue price so that they will receive the market price they desire. The procedure is the same as in the preceding problem.

Problem: A radio cost $150 and it is to be sold at a profit of 33⅓% on cost. At what price should it be listed in the catalogue, if there is a trade discount of 60% to be given?

First Step.—To Find the Sales Price:
$150 Cost
50 Profit 33⅓% on cost
$200 Selling Price

Second Step.—To Find the List Price:

List Price	100%	$500
Trade Discount	60%	$300
Selling Price	40%	$200

$200 ÷ .40 = $500, List Price or
$200 ÷ 2/5 = $200 × 5/2 = $500, List Price

Problem: A shoe store owner buys shoes at $7 a pair. He wants to make a profit of 20% on the sales price, after offering a discount of 12½% on the marked or list price. Find the marked price.

First Step–To Find the Sales Price:

Sales Price	100%	$8.75
Profit	20%	$1.75
Cost	80%	$7.00

$7 ÷ .80 = $8.75, Sales Price or
$7 ÷ 4/5 = $7 × 5/4 = 35/4 = $8.75, Sales Price

Second Step–To Find the List Price:

List Price	100%	$10.00
Trade Discount	12½%	$1.25
Sales Price	87½%	$8.75

$8.75 ÷ .875 = $10, List Price or $8.75 ÷ 7/8 = $8.75 × 8/7 = $10, List Price

Exercise

1. A haberdasher buys hats at $40 per dozen less 25% and 20%. He wants to make a profit of 25% on the cost and to offer a trade discount of 16⅔% off the list price. Find the marked or list price.
2. A merchant buys gloves at $18 per dozen pairs. He wants to make a profit of 33⅓% on cost and offer a trade discount of 20% off the list price. Find the list price.
3. A dealer pays $60 less 30%, and 10% for a rug. Selling expenses are 7½% of the selling price. He sells the rug to gain 25% on the sales price, after allowing a trade discount of 20% off the marked price. Find the marked price.
4. It cost a manufacturer $17 to make a rug. At what price should he list the rug in his catalogue to make a profit of 15% on the sales price after allowing a trade discount of 33⅓% on the catalogue price?
5. A merchant buy rugs at $28 less 25%. What is the marked price if he wishes to make a profit of 20% on the selling price after allowing a discount of 40% on the marked price?
6. A merchant buys a desk for $80. He wants to make a profit of 25% on cost. At what price must he mark it to allow a discount of 20% off the marked price?
7. A dealer buys suits at $40 less 10%. He wants to make a profit of 25% on the selling price and allow a special discount of 16⅔% off the marked price. Find the marked price.
8. A merchant buys stoves for $40 less 20% and 10%. He wants to make a profit on 33⅓% on the selling price after allowing a 10% discount on the marked price. Find the marked price.

Comparison of Profits

Very often a merchant will have a special sale on certain goods. He then wishes to make a comparison between the profit realized on the goods sold at the old price and the profit at the sale price.

Problem: During November a hardware dealer sold 24 coal stoves at $125 each. The net cost of each stove was $87.50. The overhead expense was $17.50 per stove. In December, he ran a special sale and reduced the sales price to $117.50 per stove, and sold 32 stoves. The overhead in December was $17.25 per stove.

A. How much profit did the dealer make in November?
B. How much profit did he make in December?
C. What was the rate of increase or decrease?

This problem may be calculated by two methods: on the basis of one stove or the total number of stoves.

Calculation on 1 Stove

A. November

1 stove @ $125.00 each = $125.00 Sales Price
1 stove @ $ 87.50 each = 87.50 Cost
$ 37.50 Gross Profit
17.50 Overhead
$ 20.00 Net Profit
24 stoves @ $20.00 profit on ea. = $480, Total Profit Answer

B. December

1 stove @ $117.50 each = $117.50 Sales Price
1 stove @ $ 87.50 each = 87.50 Cost
$ 30.00 Gross Profit
17.25 Overhead
$ 12.75 Net Profit
32 stoves @ $12.75 profit on ea. = $408, Total Profit Answer

C.
$480 Net Profit, November
408 Net Profit, December
$ 72 Decrease in Profit

$ 72 Decrease
\$480 Net Profit, November $= \frac{72}{480} =$
15% Rate of Decrease, Answer

Calculation on Total Number of Stoves

A. November

24 stoves @ $125.00 each = $3000 Sales Price
24 stoves @ $ 87.50 each = 2100 Cost
$ 900 Gross Profit
24 stoves @ $ 17.50 each = 420 Overhead
$ 480 Net Profit, Answer

B. December

32 stoves @ $117.50 each = $3760 Sales Price
32 stoves @ $ 87.50 each = 2800 Cost
$ 960 Gross Profit
32 stoves @ $ 17.25 each = 552 Overhead
$ 408 Net Profit, Answer

C.
$480 Net Profit, November
408 Net Profit, December
$ 72 Decrease in Profit

$ 72 Decrease
\$480 Net Profit, November $= \frac{72}{480} =$
15% Decrease, Answer

Exercise

1. A merchant bought chairs at $15 each. He sold them at $25 each. During October his sales were 150 chairs. In November, he ran a special sale, reducing the sales price to $20 per chair. The sales increased to 400 chairs.
   a. How much was the profit in October?
   b. How much was the profit in November?
   c. What was the rate of increase or decrease in the profit?
2. The Home Appliance Co. bought washing machines at $130 less 30% each. During April, 15 machines were sold at $129 each. During May, each machine was sold at $117.50 each. As a result 30 machines were sold.
   a. During which month did the company make more profit and how much?
   b. What was the rate of increase or decrease in the profit?

Answers:

1. a. $1500
b. $2000
c. 33⅓%, Increase

2. a. $570
b. $795
c. 39+% or 40%

Distribution of Partnership Profits

Profits are distributed among partners according to the arrangements set forth in the partnership contract. If no mention is made, the profits or losses are distributed equally.

There are three usual methods of division of profits. They are:

1. According to an agreed-upon ratio.
2. According to partnership investment ratio.
3. Allowing interest on investment, and then dividing the balance equally.

Problem: Vincent, Dugan, and Carver have invested $6000, $8000, and 12,000 respectively in their wholesale business. The first year their profit was $7800.

A. How much will each receive if they agree to divide their profits equally?
B. How much will each receive if they agree to divide their profits in proportion to their investments (capital ratio)?
C. How much will they receive if each partner is allowed 6% on his investment, and then the remaining profit is divided equally?

A. There are three partners.
⅓ of $7800 = $2600, each partner's share

B.

Partner	Investment	Share according to Capital Ratio	Computation of Share	Share
Vincent	$ 6000	6000/2600	3/13 of $7800	$1800
Dugan	8000	8000/26000	4/13 of $7800	2400
Carver	12000	12000/26000	6/13 of $7800	3600
Totals	$26000	26000/26000	13/13 of $7800	$7800

C.

Partner	Investment	6% Interest on Captial	⅓ of Remaining Profit	Share
Vincent	$6000	$360	$2080	$2440
Dugan	8000	480	2080	2560
Carver	12000	720	2080	2800
Totals	$26000	$1560	$6240	$7800 Total Profit

$7800 Total Profit
1560 Interest
3) 6240
$2080

Exercise

1. Todd invested $12,000 and Olsen $15,000 in their business. They agreed to allow interest on their investments of 8% and divide the remaining profit equally.
   a. How much must the business earn in one year to cover the 8% interest?
   b. If the profit at the end of the year was $5380, how much did each receive?
2. Abbot invested $12,000, Johnson $16,000, and Moore his services. Out of the first year's profit of $9675, Abbot and Johnson were allowed 12½% interest on their investments, and Moore $1600 as salary. The remaining profit was divided equally. Find each partner's income for the year.
3. Davis and Lee invested $8000 and $4000 respectively in their business. At the end of the year their sales were $18,525, cost of goods sold was $12,200 and overhead expenses were $1522. If the profit was to be divided according to their capital ratio, find each partner's share of the profit.
4. Young and Harrington invested $6000 and $12,000 respectively in their business. The sales for the year 1944 were $28,440; cost of goods sold, $15,460; overhead, $3200.
   a. Find the net profit.
   b. The profits are to be shared in capital ratio. Find each partner's share.
   c. If each partner is allowed 6% on his investment and the profit which remains is to be shared equally, how much will each partner receive?

Answers:

1. a. $2160
b. Todd $2570
Olsen $2810

2. Abbot $3025
Johnson $3525
Moore $3125

3. Davis $3202
Lee $1601

4. a. $9780
b. Young $3260
Harrington $6520

Corporation Stock

Definitions and Terms

Corporations issue stock as evidence of ownership in the corporation. When a corporation makes a profit, its directors distribute a part or all of this profit among the stockholders. This distribution of profit is called a dividend. All undistributed profit is called surplus.

The value imprinted on the face of the stock certificate is called its par value. The par value of the stock is usually $100, although stock may be issued at other par values, such as $50 or $25. Some corporations issue stock with no par value. The market price of stock is the price at which the stock is sold in the various stock markets.

In this section we take up some of the problems of computing dividends and buying and selling stock.

Computing Dividends on Stock

Problem: A corporation has a capital stock of $500,000, each share having a par value of $100. It declares a dividend of 9%. If the net profits for the year are $75,000, find the amount of the dividend and how much is left in surplus.

$500,000 ÷ $100 = 5000 shares
9% of $100 = $9, Dividend on 1 share
5000 shares × $9 = $45,000, Dividend declared
$75,000 − $45,000 = $30,000, Amount left in surplus

Problem: A corporation has a capital stock of $400,000 each share having par value of $100. Its net profit for the year is $60,000. The directors declare a dividend of 4%. Find A. the amount of the dividend; B. the amount added to surplus; C. the dividend received by a stockholder who owns 60 shares of stock.

A. $400,000 ÷ 100 = 4000 shares
4% of 100 = $4, dividend on 1 share
$4000 × 4 = $16,000, amount of dividend

B. $60,000 − $16,000 = $44,000 amount added to surplus

C. 60 shares @ $4 per share = $240, dividend received by stockholder

Exercise

(Where no par value is stated, assume it is $100.)

1. A corporation declares a semi-annual dividend of 5%. Find Mr. Jones' dividend if he owns 100 shares.
2. A corporation's capital stock is $600,000. It declares a dividend of 5%. Find the amount of the dividend declared.
3. The Lincoln Radio Co. has capital stock of $500,000. Its profit is $80,000. Its directors declare an annual dividend of 6%.
   a. What does the total annual dividend amount to?
   b. How much will go to surplus?
   c. If Harry Wells has 75 shares, how much dividend will he receive?
4. The Ocean Hardware Corp. has a capital stock of $200,000. It declares semi-annual dividends of 3%.
   a. Find the total annual dividend.
   b. Find how much Max Morse, who owns 50 shares, will receive annually.
5. Anthony Lamb has 50 shares of common stock and 12 shares of 8% preferred stock in a certain corporation. A quarterly dividend of 60¢ per share is paid on the common stock and the regular 8% dividend on the preferred. How much income annually will Mr. Lamb receive from his stock holdings?

Answers:
1. $500
2. $30,000
3. a. $30,000 b. $50,000 c. $450
4. a. $12,000 b. $300
5. $216

Finding the Rate of Dividend

Problem: A corporation which has a capital stock of $400,000 has a net profit of $80,000 for the year. It decides to keep $20,000 in surplus and distribute the rest of the profits as dividends. Find the annual rate of dividend.

$80,000 Total Profit
20,000 Surplus
$60,000 Dividend declared

$\frac{60{,}000 \text{ Dividend declared}}{400{,}000 \text{ Capital stock}}$ = 15%, Rate of dividend, Answer

Exercise

1. A corporation with capital stock of $300,000 has a net profit of $50,000. The directors declare a dividend of $30,000. Find the rate of dividend.
2. A corporation is capitalized at $200,000. It makes a profit of $45,000. If $15,000 is set aside for surplus, what will be the rate of dividend?
3. The Borax Corp, is capitalized at $500,000. At the end of the year it will pay $60,000 in dividends.
   a. Find the annual dividend rate.
   b. Find how much a person who has 50 shares will receive in dividends.
4. The Lastelle Corp., with capital stock of $1,000,000, earns $180,000 for the year. The directors declare a dividend of $120,000.
   a. Find the amount left in surplus.
   b. Find the annual rate of dividend on the stock.
   c. Find how much a stockholder who has 100 shares receives.

Answers:
1. 10%
2. 15%
3. a. 12% b. $600
4. a. $60,000 b. 12% c. $1200

Buying and Selling Stock

Stock may be bought and sold at any stock exchange through the medium of a broker who is a member of that exchange. The broker charges a fee, called brokerage, for his services. In addition a state and a federal tax must be paid on all stock sold.

Problem: Harry Wilson bought 300 shares of stock at 56½ (i.e., $56.50) and sold it at 65. Brokerage each way was 25¢ a share and the total taxes were 4¢ per share. Find his net profit on the transaction.

Sale

300 shares @ $65 each = $19,500 Sales Price
300 shares @ 25¢ each = $75 brokerage 300 shares @ 4¢ each = $12 tax
87
$19,413 Net Proceeds

Purchase

300 shares @ $56.50 each = $16,950 Cost
300 shares @ 25¢ each = 75 Brokerage
$17,025 Total Cost

$19,413 Net Proceeds of Sale
17,025 Total Cost
$ 2,388 Net Profit

Exercise

1. Stock costing $50 per share was sold for $58 per share. Brokerage each way was 24¢ per share and the taxes on the sale amounted to 4¢ per share. Find the net profit.
2. Warren bought 100 shares of stock at 90 and sold them for 105. Brokerage each way was 24¢ per share and the taxes on the sale were 4½¢ per share. Find the net profit.

3. Harris bought 300 shares of stock at 98½¢ and sold them at 112½. If brokerage is 25¢ per share each way and the taxes on the sale were 4¢ per share, find the amount of the net profit.

Answers:

Finding Profit on Sale of Stock, Dividends Having Been Received

Problem: Morris bought 300 shares of stock at 98 and sold them at 110, after holding them a year. During this time, he received 2 semi-annual dividends of 4%. Brokerage was 25¢ per share each way and taxes on the sale were 4¢. Find his total profit.

Sale

300 shares @ $110 each = $33,000 Sales Price
300 shares @ 25¢ each = $75 brokerage
300 shares @ 4¢ each = $12 tax
87 $32,913 Net Proceeds

Purchase

300 shares @ $98 each = $29,400 Cost
300 shares @ 25¢ each = 75 Brokerage
$29,475 Total Cost

$32,913 Net Proceeds of Sale
28,475 Total Cost
$ 3,438 Net Profit on Sale

Dividends

4% of 100 = $4 per share, dividend for ½ year
300 shares @ $4 = 1200, Dividend for ½ year
1200 × 2 = 2400, Dividend for 1 year

$ 3,438 Net Profit on Sale
2,400 Dividends
$ 5,838 Total Profit, Answer

Exercise

1. Harvey bought 50 shares of stock at 32, brokerage 24¢ per share. The stock pays a quarterly dividend of 1%. At the end of a year, he sold the stock at 40, brokerage 25¢ per share, tax 4¢ per share. Find his total profit on the transaction.
2. On February 1, M. King bought 70 shares of stock at 98½, brokerage 22¢ a share. On April 1 and again on October 1, he received a cash dividend of $2.50 a share. On November 1 he sold the stock at 112, brokerage 24¢ a share, tax 4¢ a share. What was King's profit?
3. Mr. Carson bought 10 shares of 7% preferred stock at $140 a share. He received dividends for one year and then sold the stock at $142 per share. Brokerage was 26¢ per share on the purchase, 27¢ per share on the sale, and there was a tax of 10¢ per share on the sale. Find his total gain on the transaction.

Finding the Rate of Return on Investment

Problem: A share of stock, par value $100, is bought for $81. A dividend of 9% is declared on the stock. Find the rate of return.

9% of $100 = $9, Dividend on 1 share

$\frac{$\ 9\ \text{Dividend}}{$81\ \text{Cost of Stock}} = \frac{1}{9} = 11\frac{1}{9}\%$, Rate of return

Exercise

1. On January 2, 1945 J. Martin invested $3400 in aircraft stock at 42½ (including brokerage). During 1945 he received 4 quarterly dividends of 60¢ each on each share of stock. (To find the number of shares, divide the investment by the cost of 1 share.) Find the rate of return on his investment.
2. An industrial stock, which yields an annual dividend of 3%, sells at $60. A public utility stock is quoted at 90 and yields a dividend of 5%. (No brokerage charges).
   a. Find the rate of return on each.
   b. Which is the better investment and by how much?
3. H. G. Lee purchases 50 shares of American Telephone & Telegraph at 190, paying a dividend of 9% per year. (Disregard brokerage.) Find the rate of return.

Answers:
1. $5\frac{11}{17}\%$
2. a. Industrial 5%, utility $5\frac{5}{9}\%$
b. Utility by $\frac{5}{9}\%$
3. $4\frac{14}{19}\%$

Bonds

Definitions and Interest

A bond is an indebtedness of a corporation. As a rule, the par value of bonds is $1000, unless otherwise stated. Bonds with a par value of less than $1000 are called baby bonds. Since bonds are evidence of debt, the corporation which issues the bonds pays interest on the bonds, usually semi-annually. The interest is called the income or yield.

Bonds are bought and sold through brokers on the stock exchanges. The price of bonds is shown in two figures, for example, 98½; however the price actually represents three figures, namely $985. Brokers charge a commission on the purchase and sale of each bond.

Bond problems, as a rule, follow the procedures set forth in the solution of stock problems, with one exception which will be shown below.

Purchase of Bonds with Accrued Interest

Since interest on bonds is usually paid semi-annually, it follows that when bonds are bought on a day which is not a day on which interest is due and payable, the buyer will have to refund to the seller the interest which has accumulated or accrued up to the date of the purchase.

Problem: Find the cost of 10 bonds, par value $1000, bought at 96 on February 1. The interest rate is 6%. Interest is payable on January 1 and July 1. Brokerage, $2.50 per bond.

Accrued interest on $1000 for 31 days from January 1 to February 1 at 6%	$ 5.17
Brokerage	2.50
Price of 1 bond	960.00
Cost of 1 bond	$ 967.67
Cost of 10 bonds—$967.67 × 10	$9676.70, Answer

Exercise

1. Find the cost of 4 bonds, par value $1000, bought at 110 on March 28, interest rate 4%, interest due March 1 and September 1, brokerage $2.50 per bond.
2. Find the cost of 20 bonds, par value $1000, bought at 98 on February 18, interest rate 6%, interest due January 1 and July 1, brokerage $2.50 per bond.

Answers:
1. $4422 2. $19,810

Sale of Bonds with Accrued Interest

The procedure in the sale of bonds is the opposite of that in computing the purchase of bonds. The accrued interest is given to the seller because it is his. Therefore, the accrued interest is added on to the selling price and the commission deducted.

Problem: A man sold 10 bonds, par value $1000, for 98 on November 30. Interest on the bonds was at the rate of 6%; the interest was due on April 1 and October 1. Brokerage was $2.50 per bond.

Accrued interest on $1000 at 6% from October 1 to November 30; 60 days	$ 10.00
Price of 1 bond	980.00
Gross Proceeds	$ 990.00
Brokerage, $2.50	2.50
Net Proceeds for 1 bond	$ 987.50
Net Proceeds for 10 bonds— $987.50 × 10	$9875.00, Answer

Exercise

1. Find the net proceeds of 5 bonds, par value $1000, sold for 105 on September 19. Interest at the rate of 6% is due on January 1 and July 1. Brokerage $2.50 per bond.
2. Find the net proceeds of 15 bonds, par value $1000, sold for 97½ on October 30. Interest at the rate of 4%, payable on February 1 and August 1. Brokerage is $2.50 per bond.

Fire Insurance

Computation of Premiums

Insurance is the protection of the insured against any money loss arising from destruction or damage to the insured property.

Problem: Conroy's place of business, valued at $7500, was insured for 60% of its value for one year. The 1-year rate was 15¢ per C (per hundred dollars). Find the amount of the premium.

60% of $7500 = $4500, Value of Policy
$4500 @ 15¢ per C = $6.75, Premium for 1 year

Suppose that in the above problem the insurance company offers Conroy a 3-year rate which is 2½ times the annual rate. Find the premium for the 3 years and the average annual premium on a 3-year policy.

$6.75, Premium for 1 year
$6.75 × 2½ = $16.88, Premium for 3 years
$1688 ÷ 3 = $5.62⅔ or $5.63, Average annual premium

Exercise

1. George Allen owns a building valued at $18,000. He insures it for 80% of its value at $1.65 per $100 for 3 years. He has a stock of goods worth $5250. He insures the stock at its inventory value at $1.20 per $100 for 1 year.
   a. Find the premium on the building.
   b. Find the premium on the stock.
   c. Find the total yearly cost of insurance.
2. Personal property valued at $5000 was insured for 80% of its value at the 3-year rate of $5.00 per M ($1000). Find the average yearly cost of insurance.
3. On January 1 a man received a bill for insurance as follows: car insurance for 1 year, $48.50; fire insurance for $6000 on his home at a 3-year rate of $8 per M, and insurance for $3000 on the contents at the 3-year rate of 50¢ per C.
   a. Find the total cost of the premiums to be paid.
   b. Find the average yearly cost of the insurance.

Answers:
1. a. $237.60 2. $6.66⅔ or $6.67
   b. $ 63.00 3. a. $111.50
   c. $142.20 b. $ 69.50

Eighty Per Cent Co-Insurance Clause

Experience has shown that a fire will seldom destroy a piece of property completely. Consequently, many people insure themselves only for a fraction of the value of the property. To encourage people to take greater precautions, the insurance companies have a clause in the policy which states that the insured will not be paid in full for a fire loss, unless he has insured himself for at least 80% of the value of the property. If he has insured himself for less than the stipulated 80%, he becomes a co-insurer with the insurance company and bears part of the loss.

Problem: A factory building valued at $24,000 was insured for $12,800 under an 80% co-insurance clause. A fire caused a loss of $6600. How much did the insurance company pay and how much of the loss did the insured bear?

The formula for determining the loss is:

$$\frac{\text{Policy}}{\text{80\% of value of property}} \times \text{Loss}$$

Substituting:

$$\frac{$12{,}800}{\text{80\% of $24,000}} = \frac{$12{,}800}{$19{,}200} = \frac{2}{3} \times $6600$$

= $4400 Company pays

$6600 Loss
4400 Company pays
$2200 Loss suffered by insured

Exercise

1. A house valued at $7500 was insured for $5000. The policy contained an 80% co-insurance clause. A fire caused a loss of $4200.
   a. How much did the insurance company pay?
   b. How much loss did the insured suffer?

2. Martin's house is valued at $6000. He insures it for $4800 under a policy containing an 80% co-insurance clause. A fire caused a loss of $3000.
   a. How much did Martin receive under his policy?
   b. How much loss did he suffer?
3. A residence valued at $9000 was insured for $6000 under a policy containing an 80% clause. A fire caused a loss of $3600.
   a. How much did the insurance company pay?
   b. What per cent of the fire loss was borne by the owner?

Answers:

1. a. $3500	2. a. $3000	3. a. $3000
b. $700	b. 0	b. 16⅔%

Reinsurance and Contributing Insurance

If a policy calls for a very large amount, the insurance company may share the risk with other companies by reinsuring the property with other companies. Thus, if a policy of $600,000 is issued, the company will reinsure the property with other companies for, say, $500,000. Thus, by reinsuring the company assumes a risk of only $100,000. Another method of sharing the risk is to have the owner of the property take policies with a number of companies. Then, when a loss occurs, each company will pay a pro-rata share.

Problem: A building is insured for $50,000 as follows: Phoenix Insurance Co., $10,000; Globe Insurance Co., $20,000; World Insurance Co., $20,000. There is a loss of $20,000. How much will each company pay?

Company	Policy	Pro-rata Share	Calculation of Share	Share
Phoenix	$10,000	$\frac{$10,000}{50,000} = \frac{1}{5}$	⅕ of $20,000	$ 4000
Globe	20,000	$\frac{20,000}{50,000} = \frac{2}{5}$	⅖ of 20,000	8000
World	20,000	$\frac{20,000}{50,000} = \frac{2}{5}$	⅖ of 20,000	8000
Total	$50,000	$\frac{$50,000}{50,000} = \frac{5}{5}$	⅝ of $20,000	$20,000

Note that this problem is solved in the same way as the partnership problem which involved pro-rata share of profits according to capital ratio.

Exercise

1. The Atlas Co. insured its building for $10,000 in three companies as follows: Star Insurance Co., $4500; Western Insurance Co., $3500, and United Insurance Co., $2000. A fire caused a partial loss of $2000. For how much is each company liable?
2. A building was insured in three companies as follows: National Co., $8000; Standard Co., $9000; Mutual Co., $3000. If a loss of $1620 occurred, for how much is each company liable?
3. A factory valued at $20,000 was insured in two companies, each policy having an 80% co-insurance clause. The policy in the Arrow Co. was for $4000 and in the Bow Co. for $10,000. There is a fire loss of $3200. How much must each company pay? (Note: The first step is to find the loss under the 80% clause; then distribute the loss between the two companies.)

Answers:

1. Star $900	3. Arrow $800
Western $700	Bow $2000
United $400
2. National $648
Standard $729
Mutual $243

Real Estate

Rent

People who wish to buy real estate are confronted by a number of problems. Among them are:

1. Is it cheaper to rent or to buy?
2. If the house is rented to a tenant, what will be the per cent of return on the investment?
3. If the house is rented to a tenant, how much rent should be charged?

Renting vs. Buying

Problem: Henry Clark is paying $35 a month rent for a cottage. He can buy it for $4900 by paying 10% of the purchase price in cash and giving a mortgage bearing 5% interest on the balance. His estimated annual expenses are: taxes $125, water charges $25, repairs $50, and insurance $2. If he can earn 2% interest on his cash investment in the bank, will it be cheaper to rent or to buy?

Rental

12 months @ $35 per mo. = $420 Rental per year

Purchase

$4900 Cost of House
490 Cash Payment 10%
$4410 Mortgage

Expenses

Interest on mortgage (5% of $4410)	$220.50
Taxes	125.00
Water charges	25.00
Repairs	50.00
Insurance	2.00
Interest on investment (2% of $490)	9.80
Total Expense	$432.30

$432.30 Total Expense
420.00 Rental
$ 12.30 Cheaper to Rent

Rate of Return on Investment

Problem: Vinson bought a house for $6700, giving $1200 cash as a down payment and a 5% mortgage for the balance. In addition to the mortgage interest, other annual expenses were: taxes $143, insurance $9, repairs $75, depreciation 2% of cost of house. He rented the house to a tenant for $60 per month. Find the rate of return on his cash investment.

Rental to Tenant

12 months @ $60 per mo. = $720, Rental

Annual Expense

$6700 Cost of House
1200 Cash Payment
$5500 Mortgage

Expenses

Interest on mortgage (5% of $5500)	$275.00
Taxes	143.00
Insurance	9.00
Repairs	75.00
Depreciation (2% of $6700)	134.00
Total Expenses	$636.00

$720 Rental
636 Expenses
$ 84 Net Income

$$\frac{84}{1200} = 7\% \text{ Return, } \textit{Answer}$$

Note that the actual cash investment is the down payment of $1200.

How Much Rent to Charge a Tenant

Problem: Harris owns a house that cost $8500. His yearly taxes are $225, repairs $100, insurance $26, and water bill $20. What monthly rental, to the nearest dollar, must he charge to realize 6% on his investment?

Desired Income

6% of $8500 = $510 Desired Annual Income

Expenses

Taxes	$225
Repairs	100
Insurance	26
Water bill	20
Total expenses	$371

$510 Desired Income
371 Expenses
$881 Annual Rent to be charged
$881 ÷ 12 = $73.41⅔ or $74.00 per month (to the nearest dollar)

Since the expenses must be borne by the tenant, they are added to the desired income to calculate the rental to be paid by the tenant.

Exercise

1. Brown buys a house for $5500, paying $1000 cash and giving a 5% mortgage for the balance. He insures the house for $4500 at the rate 50¢ per C. Taxes amount to $85 and depreciation and repairs are estimated at 3% of the cost. Brown desires a 6% return on his cash investment. What monthly rent, to the nearest dollar, must he charge a tenant?
2. Bernard bought a house for $10,000, paying $3500 cash and giving a 5% mortgage for the balance. Besides the interest on the mortgage, his annual expenses were: Taxes $300, water $80, oil $250, insurance $110, depreciation $490. He rented the house to a tenant for $150 per month. Find the rate of return on his cash investment.
3. Altman is paying $4800 a year rent for the first floor of a building. He can buy the building for $60,000. He would then receive $3000 yearly in rent from the other two floors. His annual expenses would amount to: taxes $950, insurance $240, repairs and janitor service $1700. If money is worth 6% to him in his business (6% of $60,000 would be lost and therefore is considered an expense), how much would he gain or lose by buying the building?

Answers:
1. $47 2. 7% 3. $1310 saved

Real Estate Taxes

Finding the Tax Rate

A government, to maintain itself, must impose taxes. Chief among taxes are those imposed on real estate. To levy the tax equitably and fairly, a value is given each piece of real estate. This value is called the assessed value and the tax is levied on the assessed valuation. To find out the tax rate the rule to follow is:

$$\frac{\text{Money Needed or Expenses}}{\text{Assessed Valuation}} = \text{Tax Rate}$$

The tax rate may be expressed as a per cent, or mills per dollar (a mill is .001 cent) or dollars per C ($100) or M ($1000).

Problem: Property in the city of Newcastle is assessed at $9,850,000. The expenses for the year are estimated to be: street improvements, $18,600; salaries, $46,300; schools, $102,500; sewers, $7250; buildings, $13,750; interest on bonded debt, $1300. It is estimated that $1500 will be received from special licenses and $5000 from the state as aid for schools.

A. Find the tax rate correct to the nearest hundred thousandth (5 places).
B. Express this rate per $1000.

A.

Money Needed or Expenses

$ 18,600	Street improvements
46,300	Salaries

7,250	Sewers
13,750	Buildings
1,300	Interest on debt
$189,700	Total expense
6,500	Total income
$183,200	Net expense to be raised by taxes

Income

$1500	Special licenses
5000	State school aid
$6500	Total income

$189,700	Total expense
6,500	Total income
$183,200	Net expense to be raised by taxes

$$\frac{$183{,}200}{$9{,}850{,}000} = $.01859 \text{ per dollar, } \textit{Answer}$$

B. $.01859 × 1000 = $18.59 per M ($1000), Answer

Finding the Tax Rate

When an owner of real estate knows his assessed valuation and the tax rate, he can find how much tax he must pay by multiplying the assessed valuation by the tax rate.

Problem: In the above problem, how much will Jones pay if his house, worth $10,000, is assessed at 80% of its value?

80% of $10,000 = $8000, Assessed valuation $8000 × .01859 (tax rate) or $8000 × 18.59 per M ($1000) = $148.72 Tax

Exercise

1. Taxable property in a certain town is assessed at $4,540,000. It is estimated that $2500 will be received from special licenses and $75,300 in state aid for schools. The estimated yearly expenses are: wages, $55,000; schools, $52,800; buildings, $20,000; improvements, $8000; interest on bonds, $12,000.
   a. Find the tax rate (correct to 5 places) to yield income to pay the budget (expenses).
   b. Express this rate as a tax per M ($1000).
   c. Mr. Johnson's property is valued at $7500 and is assessed at 80% of its value. How much tax will Mr. Johnson pay?
2. The assessed valuation of taxable property in a school district is $9,450,000. The gross cost of operating the schools is $300,669.21. Income from state aid and non-resident tuition fees is $126,623.97.
   a. Find the tax rate (carry the decimal to five places).
   b. Express this rate as tax rate per M ($1000).
   c. John Sperry's house is valued at $12,000 and assesssed for 75% of its value. Find the amount of Mr. Sperry's school tax.
3. In a certain city, the assessed valuation of taxable property is $63,143,000. The city's total budget to meet expenses is $1,896,190. Receipts from other sources will amount to $736,240.
   a. Find the tax rate (carry the decimal to five places).
   b. Express the rate as a tax rate per M ($1000).
   c. H. Groves' property, valued at $16,000, is assessed at 75% of its value. Find the amount of his tax.

Business Letter Writing

by Irving Rosenthal and Harry W. Rudman

Appearance and Structure of the Business Letter

In your letters, just as in your clothes, a good appearance is vital to making a favorable first impression. And the first is usually the lasting impression. Therefore it pays to take pains with the looks of your business letters. Use good paper; see that the typing is neat, well spaced and free from erasures; and let no error slip through that you can possibly catch.

Paper

Use good stationery. A secretary, sorting her employer's mail, may put your letter into the heap for "second" instead of "first reading" if it is on recognizably cheap paper. Why run that risk?

Showy, expensive stationery should also be avoided. Certainly the reader may take notice of parchment textures, deckle edges, and other ostentation; but it may not be with the reactions you desire. Such paper may arouse suspicion or contempt. A paper stock suitable for diplomatic correspondence, ceremonial invitations, or graduation certificates is obviously out of place in business correspondence.

Moreover, the most expensive paper is not always the best for correspondence. It may take ink poorly and prevent even and legible typing.

Sizes

Use standard 8½ by 11 inch sheets for longer letters and half sheets, 5½ by 8½ inches, for shorter letters. A brief message on a half sheet will look better than the same message lost on a full-size sheet.

Sometimes the so-called "Baronial" size, 10½ by 7¼ inches, is used. But this is generally reserved for correspondence by executives, with their names and titles engraved and embossed on the letterheads.

Color

White will probably remain the favored color of business letters. But the trend to other colors, especially in sales correspondence, has been increasing. It has been found that the bright colors, such as yellow and red, are "attention getters." These are being used increasingly for just that purpose. Color may also be used for associative value. An air travel company may select sky blue for its stationery; a vacation resort, green.

The Letterhead

Your letterhead has two purposes. Because it is your identification, you want it to be attractive and impressive. And because it supplies the reader with essential information about your company—name, address, telephone number, etc., you want it to be clear and readable.

Fussy lettering and fancy symbols, mistakenly intended to impress the reader, unfortunately produce a different effect. Like pretentiously expensive stationery they may evoke annoyance and ill will instead. In any case, if they serve to a make a letterhead hard to read at first glance, they may be considered unsatisfactory.

Below are some letterheads showing attractive lettering and symbols that are impressive and in good taste without sacrifice of clarity.

Bottom and Side-Margin Messages

Business stationery sometimes carries printed matter at the foot of the sheet or down the side margins. The foot-line (it is seldom longer than a line) is usually the motto or slogan of the firm or a special sales message. Such messages may also be printed on the side margins, usually the left-hand margin. Most marginal matter, however, consists of lists of officers, sponsors, or branches of the organization.

Additional Sheets

Whenever a letter is longer than one page, the extra sheets should be of the same paper stock but without the letterhead imprint. A continuation line carrying the name of the addressee (the person to whom the letter is addressed), the page number, and the date should be typed at the top of each additional page. See that a minimum of three lines of text, besides the complimentary close and the signature, appear on the final page of the letter. For the sake of appearance it will be worth retyping the preceding page, if necessary, to make that possible.

Framing

Good typography requires proper placement of type on the page so that it sits in its margins like a well-framed picture. Since typewriting is a form of typography, accordingly it follows the same rules. The typewriting on a letter should be so arranged that, within its margins, in the spacing of dateline, salutation, and closing lines, and in its paragraphing, it resembles a well-composed and well-framed picture.

To achieve this pleasing effect the typist does not have to be an artist. She need only follow her own orderly habits of care in her margins (which should be larger in a brief letter), in her paragraph spacing, and in her indentations.

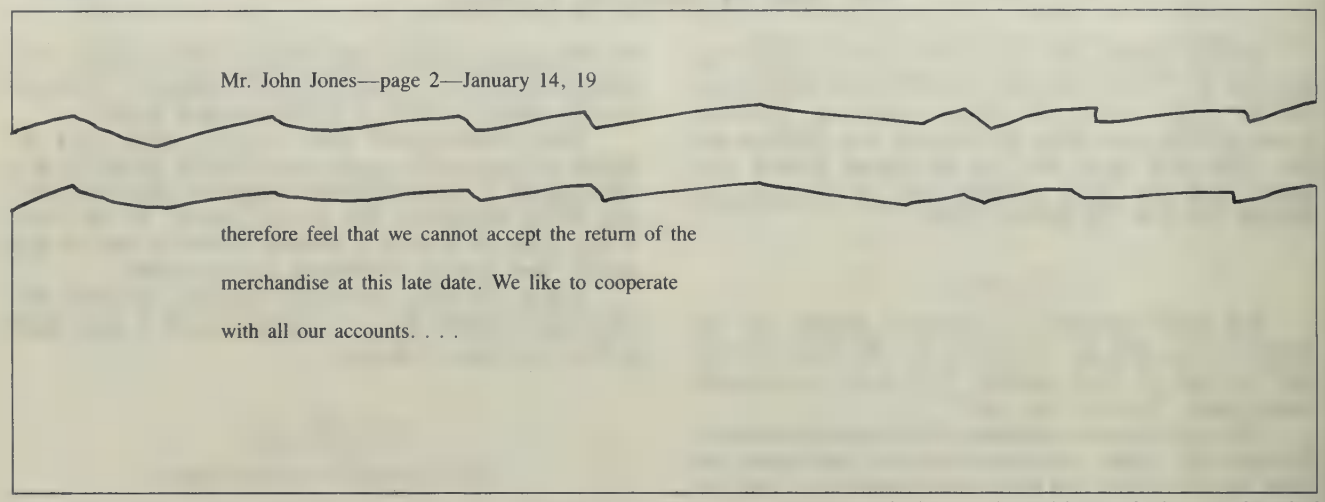
Indentations

When letters were hand-written, paragraph indentations were necessary for visual clarity. The universal use of the typewriter has tended to make indentations encumbrances instead of conveniences. Many business letters, today, dispense with them. It is becoming general practice to use line space separations instead. This device speeds up stenographic work and improves the appearance as well. But whichever practice is used, it should be employed uniformly throughout the letter.

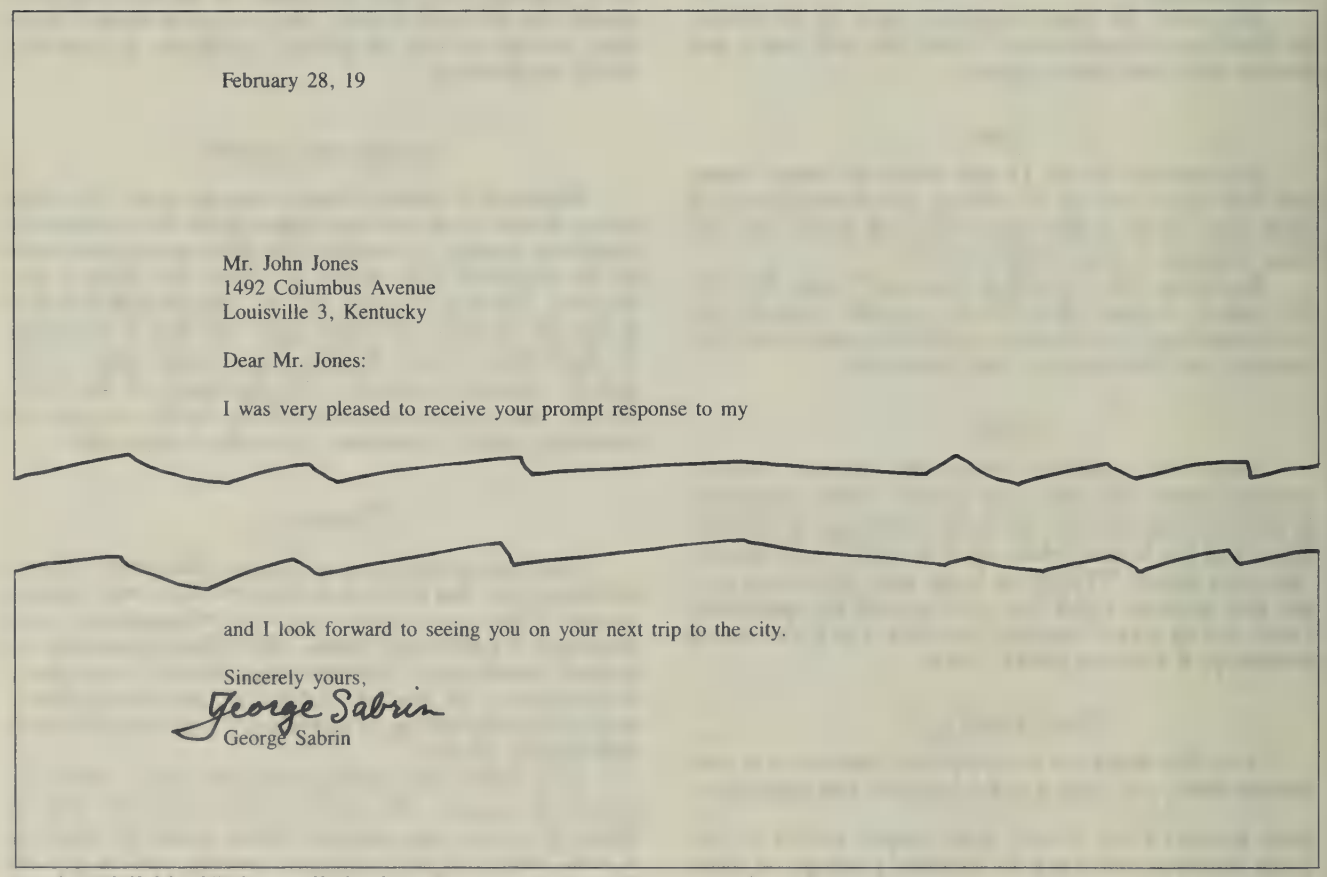
Nevertheless, the change from indentations to line spaces for paragraph indications and other purposes has not been complete. Today four forms are in use: The "full block" form; a kind of transitional form called "modified block"; the old "full indentation" form; and a type used for special effects, called "hanging indentation."

Additional Sheets



It was necessary, because of its length, to continue this letter on an additional sheet. The additional sheet is headed by the addressee's name, the page number, and the date. There is the requisite minimum of three lines of text, in addition to complimentary close and signature.

The "Full Block" Form



In the "full block" form all the letter's contents are aligned on the left hand margin.

This form is all but obsolete, and there seems little doubt that in time it will cease entirely to be used.

The "Full Block" Form

The "full block" form is gaining in usage because of its simplicity. In the full block form everything under the letterhead—dateline, inside address, salutation, body of the letter, complimentary close and signature—is aligned along the left-hand margin.

The "Modified Block" Form

The "modified block" form is the style in widest use. Here certain parts of the letter, such as the date line, the complimentary close, and the signature, are aligned to the right to help balance the rest of the letter, which has a left-hand alignment.

Some companies use the full block form for short letters (where it makes a better appearance) and the modified block form for longer letters.

Full Indentation

As mentioned before, the fully indented letter is a survival of the period when letters were hand-written. The typewriter has rendered this form obsolete. Today only a small proportion of business correspondence is typed in the full indentation form.

In the full indentation form not only paragraphs are indented but also the separate lines in the inside address and other sequences of lines in salutations and complimentary closings.

Hanging Indentation

"Hanging indentation" is seldom seen in business correspondence other than sales-promotion letters. There, it is used to focus attention or attain a repetitive, "hammering-home" effect.

Punctuation and Abbreviations

Along with the dropping of indentations there has been a tendency to do without unessential punctuation and to avoid abbreviations, especially in the inside address where these would necessitate punctuation. This economy is for improvement of appearance—lines without terminal punctuation marks look less fussy—and for speed and convenience. The typist, freed of the bother of punctuating and figuring out abbreviations, can turn out more letters a day.

A stark, attractive simplicity, characteristic of the full block form of business letter, is increasingly to be noticed in the modified block letter as well. Periods are being omitted from the end of the dateline and after ordinal numbers such as 43rd and 44th; and commas, from the ends of the inside address lines. It is now also allowable to omit the colon from the salutation and the comma from the complimentary close. Most letters, however, still retain these marks of punctuation.

Abbreviations of cities and states are being avoided. Such abbreviations as Mr. or initials for first names are being retained and are followed by periods.

The new, unpunctuated form, where all punctuation is omitted, is called "open punctuation." The practice of using some punctuation is termed "mixed punctuation." The old form is called "closed punctuation." See the examples below:

Dear Sir:

If you've been reading COSMOS for years, I hope you'll forgive me for sending you a letter you don't need—But you'll understand why I jumped at the chance to write a special letter to a list (on which your name appears) of successful executives who have been appointed to even more responsible posts.

For readers of COSMOS know that the busier a man is the more rewarding COSMOS can be. And if you haven't yet discovered the added advantage of reading COSMOS for every week's news, then I hope you'll look into it now.

It's a quick, reliable short-cut to information you'll use a dozen times a day. A readable, reliable report on the

It is to be noted that this form is not appropriate for normal business correspondence, but is widely used in the sales letter for the apparent reason that it readily strikes the eye, arrests attention.

Even in the past the use in the salutation of the semicolon or the colon and dash was incorrect. Such practices today are grossly illiterate. Do not use Dear Mr. Shorey; or Dear Mr. Shorey:—

Elements of the Letter

Business letters should have at least the following elements: the letterhead, dateline, inside address, salutation, body, complimentary close, two signatures (the name of the company typed out and the written signature of the writer), and the dictator's and typist's initials, the former, usually in capitals and the latter in small letters. In addition, depending upon the operating procedure of the writer's company, there may be a file number, an order number, or a subject line for the purpose of future reference; an "attention" line where the letter is directed to a particular person or department; notice of an enclosure; and a postscript.

The Dateline

Usually the dateline is typed at the right. In full block letters it may be typed flush with the left margin. Sometimes it is centered under the letterhead.

The customary sequence is month, day, and year: as April 5, 1971. Some logical persons have been advocating a usage, now standard in Great Britain and in our armed forces, of a progressive time-interval sequence—the shortest interval, the day, first, followed by the month, and then the year: as 5 April 1971. Although not common, this form is acceptable.

The Inside Address

Inside addresses are included in business letters for several practical purposes. The inside address serves as a ready identification since envelopes are usually thrown away; it helps in filing correspondence; and it can be used with window envelopes. It is also useful to the post office when checking misdirected letters or letters with no return address on the envelope.

The inside address usually consists of three lines: the name of the person or the firm, the street address, and the line carrying city, state, and zip code. In foreign mail a fourth line carries the name of the country. If the addressee is associated with a company, its name may appear under his as the second line.

Examples:

Mr. Thomas Smith
24 West 98 Street
New York, N.Y. 10025

Mr. Alan May 16 Charing Cross
London, N.W. (Zone No.)
England

Mr. Thomas Smith
West Side Riding Academy
24 West 98 Street
New York, N.Y. 10025

The Salutation

Present-day usage for the normal salutation is the word Dear and the title and the name of the addressee: as Dear Mr. Doe or Dear Mr. Roe. In personal friendships between businessmen it is permissible for them to use first names or nicknames in salutations: as Dear John or Dear Hank. In formal address the expression, My Dear Mr. Doe, is often used.

Sales letters addressed to regular patrons may use terms like Dear Customer, Dear Madam, Dear Subscriber, etc. In mass mailings any general terms such as Dear Sir, Dear Madam, Dear Friend, Dear Fellow Citizen, Dear Reader or any other salutation considered appropriate may be used—or none at all.

Whenever open punctuation is used, the colon may be omitted after the salutation. But, as we have mentioned before, it is more customary to retain it. The colon-dash and the semicolon, however, are never correct.

There are special forms of address for persons of high rank in government, the armed forces, the church, and the professions. These will be found in Appendix D.

Body

The body of the letter is, of course, its most important part. In appearance it should be clearly typed, neatly spaced, and uniform in typographical construction.

Long paragraphs should be avoided. The paragraphs should not be so short, however, as to give any impression of talking down to the addressee. But in sales letters short paragraphs are almost always the rule, in order to sustain interest.

Underlining to indicate italics or to give emphasis is being displaced by capitalizing. Capitals are regarded as more readable, more emphatic, and more pleasing in appearance. Moreover, capitalizing makes for easier and more rapid typing. Titles of books and names of periodicals, however, should continue to be underlined or placed in quotation marks.

The contents of the body will be dealt with at greater length in the separate sections discussing the different types of business letters. Here we may generalize as follows:

The opening paragraph should be short and, unless there is a compelling negative reason, it should immediately introduce the subject of the letter or connect it with a previous development in the correspondence. The middle paragraphs should do the main job of the letter—expand on the subject in such a way as to persuade the addressee to act upon it in the manner you desire. Let it convince him that it will be proper for or advantageous to him to conclude the purchase or the agreement, or to make the postponement, the payment, or the adjustment you are seeking.

The closing paragraph should summarize your message and make clear the action you desire. Avoid wavering words like hoping, wishing, trusting, etc. Be positive. Say something like "We feel certain that you will agree that this is the most satisfactory solution." Avoid dangling participial endings, such as "Hoping we hear from you."

The Complimentary Close

Just as you open your letter with a word of friendly greeting, so you close it with a cordial expression—what is called the complimentary close. Some people propose dispensing with both, and recommended plunging into the letter without salutation and closing abruptly with the signature. But the convention is so firmly entrenched as to render it unlikely that this suggested procedure will take hold.

The customary forms are "Yours truly," "Yours sincerely," or "Yours very truly" where the relationship is formal. The terms "Yours sincerely," "Sincerely yours," "Faithfully yours," and "Cordially yours" express rising degrees of intimacy. "Respectfully yours" has gone out of fashion and is now generally restricted to correspondence with dignitaries or official superiors in formal situations.

The Signature

It is considered a discourtesy not to sign a letter personally. If this becomes an impossibility and a rubber stamp has to be used, it should be inked and imprinted in such a way as to resemble the true signature as closely as possible. If the writer's secretary signs for him, she should put her initials under the signature to make that fact clear.

New attitudes regarding the position of women do not seem to have penetrated into business correspondence, at least as regards their marital status. That has to be indicated in the signature. A married woman who wishes to use her maiden name in business should add her married name (Mrs._____) in parentheses. A widow retains her married name unless she takes legal steps to resume her maiden name. A divorcee retains her former husband's surname but may not use his initials or his first name.

Where the company name is included in the signature, it is typed one or two lines below the complimentary close. Four spaces should be left for the writer's signature, and his name and company position should follow:

Yours sincerely,

Thomas Smith

THE JOHN JONES COMPANY
Sales Manager

To make sure that the signature is not misread, the name is often typed above or below it.

Yours sincerely,
THE JOHN JONES COMPANY

Thomas Smith

Thomas Smith
Sales Manager

Special Parts of the Business Letter: File Numbers

In addition to the standard parts of the letter special requirements may call for additional lines or items. On traffic or mail order correspondence file or other reference numbers may appear, usually at the left of the dateline or under it.

Attention Line

When a letter is addressed to an individual in a firm but is not intended for him exclusively, or if it is intended to be routed to a certain department, a line is added to that effect. Letters are often addressed to the attention of an individual instead of to him directly so that, if he should be away, the letter will not be held up but will be acted upon by the person temporarily taking his place.

The attention line is usually put between the inside address and the salutation, and may be placed either at the left, as in the example below, or in the center of the line.

The John Jones Company
710 West 10 Street
New York, N.Y. 10011

Attention Mr. Thomas Smith, Sales Manager

Gentlemen:

Note that where the attention line is used, the salutation is Gentlemen, not Dear Mr. Smith.

Enclosure Line

The enclosure line in the letter is not for the addressee, who will be informed about the enclosure in the text of the letter. It is for the mailing clerk or the stenographer herself as a reminder to include the enclosure in the mailing. It should therefore be in an inconspicuous position. It is usually typed under the stenographer's initials, as an abbreviation: Encl.

Postscripts

Postscripts in business letters differ from those in personal letters, which are afterthoughts set down after the letters have been finished. In business correspondence, postscripts have a definite, planned function. They may emphasize a point made elsewhere in the letter, or they may make a special offer. They are more customary in sales letters than in other business correspondence, and are designed to draw special attention. Examples will be found in the section on sales letters.

Envelopes

As much care should be observed with the envelope as with the letter itself. It is the first part of the letter to be seen, and, as we have already observed, the first impression is important. It should, of course, be of the same paper stock as the letter. The address should be typed in such a way as to be in pleasing balance with the imprint on the top left-hand corner, if there is such an imprint; or it should be well framed on the front of the envelope if the return address is imprinted on the flap in back.

The two standard envelope sizes are the number 6¾ and the number 10. The latter is also called the "official size" envelope. It is long enough to hold the full standard letterhead width of 8½ inches. The number 6¾ size averages that number of inches in width. Envelopes used for Baronial size stationery average 7½ inches in width, enough to permit enclosure folded the full width of the sheet.

Folding the Letter and Inserting Enclosures

Part of the appearance of the letter depends, of course, on the way it is folded and placed in the envelope. Here the convenience of the addressee also receives consideration. The letter should be folded so that he can open it with ease and read it with comfort.

For the number 10 or the long "official size" envelope, the letter should be folded from the bottom to a little over a third of the page. Crease the fold down firmly. Then fold the top third down over the bottom fold and crease firmly again. Then slip the folded letter into the envelope.

For the number 6¾ envelope, fold the letter from the bottom to about a quarter of an inch from the top. See that the sides are even when creasing. Now fold from the sides, first from right to left about a third of the way and then from left to right, creasing firmly after each of the two folds. Then enclose the letter with the last fold toward you. This will insure that when it is received the letter can be removed with the open end on top.

Checks, receipts, or other small enclosures should be placed inside the folds. If placed outside the folds, in the envelope, such vital items may be torn or cut when the envelope is opened; or they may be overlooked by the recipient and thrown away with the discarded envelope.

Letters mailed in window envelopes must be folded in a special way.

The Outside Address

Each year, according to post office records, some thirty million pieces of mail end up in the dead letter office. The chief reason is careless addressing.

The customary address form consists of four lines: the name and title of the addressee, street address or post office box number, city, state, and zip code. On all foreign mail the name of the country will, of course, replace the state, or be added as a fifth line.

Additional lines may be required for a province or department name in a foreign address, an apartment number, a company name in addition to the name of the individual addressee, an attention line if the letter is to be routed to a department of the company or to an individual in a department, or the specification, Personal or Confidential, where the letter is intended for private reading by the addressee.

Except where they are part of the address, such additional lines are typed in the lower left-hand corners of the envelopes.

No customary position has been settled upon for postal directions like Air Mail or % S.S. America. These may be written, rubber-stamped, or typed anywhere on the envelope, usually above the address. They should be conspicuous, but they should not obscure the address.

For readability and appearance the following positions have been found most satisfactory. In all cases start the address slightly below the vertical center of the envelope. On a number 6¾ envelope start slightly to the left of the horizontal center when using the block style. When using the indented style on this size of envelope start about one third the width of the envelope from the left.

On the larger number 10 envelope start slightly to the right of the horizontal center when using the block style. When using the indented style, start slightly to the left of the horizontal center.

Addresses of unusual size or envelopes with the return address on the flap in back may call for variations of these positions.

The Return Address

It is more convenient as well as more customary for the return address to appear on the front of the envelope than on the back flap. In any case make sure it appears somewhere on the envelope. This practice will be an additional precaution against the letter's ending up in the dead letter office.

Titles of Respect

It is customary to include certain titles of respect in the address. This courtesy extends to physicians after whose name M.D. usually appears, and to engineers (C.E., M.E., or E.E.). These abbreviations are professional as well as academic designations. Purely scholastic titles like M.A. or non-professional titles like B.S. or Ph.B., etc., are omitted. In formal correspondence, however, higher degrees like D.D., LL.D., Ph.D., etc., may be used in the address.

Numbers and Abbreviations and Their Punctuation

It is the preferred usage to write out a numbered street or avenue—for example, 500 Fifth Avenue or 223 East Thirty-third Street. Where the number is above ninety-nine, it usually appears as a number: 2204 220th Street. Do not abbreviate the name of the city, and avoid abbreviating the name of the state. The tendency is away from such abbreviations. Ordinal number-ending abbreviations like th and rd are not, today, followed by the period. Use 33rd and 34th, not 33rd. and 34th.

Zip Codes

On July 1, 1963, a new system of mail sorting and distribution called zip code was initiated by the Post Office Department. The zip code is a 5-digit number designed to cut down the steps required to move mail from the sender to the addressee, thereby holding down postal costs. The first three digits of the code identify sectional centers, which are main points of air, highway, and rail transportation, and the last two digits identify the post office or delivery station. In cities that previously had local postal zones, the first three digits of the zip code identify the city and the last two digits (which are generally the same as the former zone number) designate the branch post office or substation.

The first numeral of the zip code, 0 to 9, identifies one of ten national service areas. The second and third digits indicate the service area subdivision and the post office, and the last two digits identify the station from which the mail is delivered.

While the use of zip codes is optional but strongly recommended for first-class mail, it is mandatory for second-class and third-class bulk mailers, who must also presort and bundle their mail in accordance with detailed instructions that appear in the Postal Manual. Large-volume mailers should familiarize themselves with the regulations regarding zip codes by consulting the Postal Manual or their local post office, since failure to conform to the zip coding requirements can result in refusal of the post office to handle improperly zip-coded mail at the lower bulk rates.

Placement. The zip code should appear on the last line of both the address and return address following the city and state. There should be not less than two nor more than six spaces between the last letter of the state and the zip code, and no characters of any kind should follow the zip code:

The Sales Letter

The concern of all business is to sell goods or services. Consequently all business letters are, directly or indirectly, sales letters.

Your best collection letter, for example, is one that does more than induce a delinquent customer to pay up. It is the one that leaves him convinced, after the payment, that he has been dealing with a fair and considerate house with which he is glad to continue doing business.

Sales letters, as such, are distinguished from other business letters by the fact that their sales objective is not indirect but direct and, more or less, immediate. The qualifying phrase, "more or less," is used because some varieties of sales letters are not intended to make an immediate sale but rather to lead gradually to sales. And others are intended to pave the way for sales by other means.

Certain sales letters, for example, may be written to help a salesman make the sale. Others may be written to bring customers for your products to one of your dealers.

The most common and largest variety of sales letter is used in direct mail selling. Devices employed in that type of sales letter are presented in a later section; here we shall deal with the more general aspects of sales letters, and take up types of sales correspondence that are part of regular business operations.

Your Satisfied Customer

No selling job is ever over. The alert businessman keeps analyzing his accounts. Can A's volume be increased? B's orders show a slight decline over last year's; does that mean a decline in his business? Or is he sampling the ware of a competitor? Whatever his conclusion, the alert businessman sends off the appropriate letter.

In An Effort to Increase Sales

Dear Mr. Martin:

I have been very pleased to note the steady increase in the frequency and size of your orders since we started doing business together. It is gratifying to know that our product is being well received in your area and that you are making money with it.

My reason for writing is twofold—to thank you for your patronage and to offer our cooperation in any way that will build your sales of our product even further. Under separate cover I am sending you some advertising aids that can be used in window and counter displays; mats for newspaper ads; and suggested spot announcements for your local radio station. Frank Moss, our representative in your territory, will drop in on you next Thursday to help you set up these displays and to offer his assitance in every way. If there is anything special you may need, don't hesitate to get in touch with me.

I look forward to the continuance of our pleasant, and I hope, mutually profitable relationship. With all good wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,
Robert Johns

In An Effort to Retain Good Will

Dear Mr. Burke:

Somewhere or other we read: "There are many good excuses for losing an order—but no excuse whatever for losing good will!"

That's why we're writing to you—not to ask why you preferred to place your recent order with somebody else, but to make sure it wasn't because of something which has lost us your good will as well.

If it was the latter, we'd be most grateful if you'd write us about it.

But regardless, we sincerely hope your new equipment gives you the kind of performance you expect of it—and that you won't hesitate to make use of our nationwide service facilities should the need arise.

Next time, perhaps, it will be our good fortune to take care of your requirements.

Sincerely,
William H. Wolcott

The alert businessman never feels smug about his satisfied customers. He does not leave the initiative to them, content merely to take orders. He bears in mind those two business adages: "It costs less to keep a customer than to get one," and "Your customer is your competitor's prospect."

If he starts a new line, if he makes an improvement in one of his staples, if he has a plan for reducing the price to a customer by quantity shipping of combined orders, the alert businessman lets his satisfied customer know about it. He does not wait for the word to get around; he sees to it that it gets around. Keeping the satisfied customer posted is a good way of keeping them satisfied.

Dear Larry:

I hope this finds you well and your business booming. I think I have something that you ought to be able to go to town on.

I've just picked up a special lot of piece goods off-price that I'm going to cut tomorrow in Style 637, with which you have done so well. I plan to bring out the number at two dollars less than you have been paying, and I know it will fit in well with your January sale.

I can get a limited number of garments out of the lot, so I'd like to know how many you can use before I offer it to anyone else. We'll be able to ship within ten days.

All good wishes.

Sincerely yours,
Phil Nelson

Dear Mr. Forman:

When you were in the city several weeks ago, you mentioned the difficulties you were having in getting fast deliveries of merchandise shipped to you by us and by other manufacturers. I think I've come across something that can help you.

I have just had a conversation with Jack Bell of Vanguard Trucking, 247 Terhune Place, Jersey City, N.J., who runs a fleet of trucks through your territory. He told me that if you can work out an arrangement with a few other merchants near you to consolidate shipments, he will be glad to set aside one of his trucks to serve your group. If the amount of freight warrants it, he can provide daily overnight deliveries, and is confident he can cut your present transportation costs by forty per cent. I think its worth looking into, and I suggest you get in touch with Mr. Bell for more particulars.

Sincerely yours,
Robert Glass

Frequent Communication

Keep the contacts with your customers unbroken and, so far as you can, make the contacts personal. Some firms regard communication with their customers, once a month, a minimum requirement for good customer relations. They do not limit the correspondence to invoices and routine acknowledgments of orders and payments. To the routine mail they add interesting enclosures. And they take advantage of every suitable occasion to extend the contact. They avoid formalities and try to set up a personal relationship. For signatures they do not use only the firm name but rather the name of an officer of the firm, the head of a department, or a salesman.

Some concerns go about unobtrusively getting personal items about their customers and keep the data current. Birthdays are remembered. If a buyer gets married or has an addition to the family, the event is observed.

Many service firms such as laundries and cleaning establishments find it profitable to send their customers and prospective customers blotters bearing calenders and reminders of seasonal cleaning needs.

Department stores keep in touch with their charge-customers by sending them advance notices of sales, seasonal announcements, and letters about special services. Whatever your business is, there are sure to be occasions for getting in touch with your customers other than through routine notices and acknowledgments.

Special Customers

In every business there are customers who rate or demand special attention. Some should get it merely because the large volume of their business calls for every possible special and even personal consideration. Special and personal letters, if feasible, will be in order.

Others may have special needs. For example, dealers located in hot, moist regions may require special packaging or other measures to keep the wares they receive in good condition. Letters dealing with such special needs are in order.

Others may be merely fussy or eccentric. These may be hard to do business with and require special sales correspondence. If you decide that the volume of their business justifies it, carry on that additional correspondence with good grace.

Letters to Help Your Salesmen

The salesman may be assisted, through letters, in two general ways. One type of letter prepares the ground for him—introduces him, mentions the new line he will demonstrate, some special offer he will explain in detail, etc.

Such help to a salesman may be needed for several reasons. One is the lingering effect of the fictional presentation of the salesman as an intrusive, high-pressure man with his toes wedged in the door sill, launched on a non-stop spiel. Even dealers who have good relations with salesmen and have found them helpful may think of those they know as exceptions and look for the obnoxious type in a new man. A letter can help the new man by presenting him in a friendly light, stressing the useful service he is to perform—the demonstration he will make or the plan he will explain, etc.

In such letters, however, take care not to tell the customer too much. Remember that the purpose is to introduce the salesman, not to substitute for his call. The letter should stimulate the customer's curiosity and leave it to the salesman to satisfy it. Similar letters can serve to bring customers to your show rooms, to exhibition booths, to dealers handling your products or services.

Letters sent between sales calls can strengthen the salesman-customer relationship. The seasonal nature of certain kinds of merchandise or the fact that salesmen will make only a few trips a year in the ordinary course, gives rise to considerable correspondence about reorders, substitutions, cancellations, returns, complaints, and the acknowledgments and adjustments these call for. As much of this correspondence as is practical should go out under the salesman's signature.

In addition it is frequently advisable to send out, also under the salesman's signature, letters advising the customer of new developments, new lines, new policies, etc. Even in business the strongest bonds are personal, and a good salesman-customer relationship means a good relationship with the customer for the firm.

Testimonials

When enough time has elapsed for a new account to have tested your products and your business procedures, it is a good plan to write to the customer and ask whether he is satisfied and whether he has any suggestions or comments to make. This kind of inquiry should be the first step in the continuous keeping-your-customer-sold campaign that was mentioned earlier.

Such letters may evoke testimonials that will prove valuable in your promotion. And the letters will probably have the additional value of providing a running check on your business methods by revealing from time to time the need for changes.

Build up a testimonial file from the favorable letters your inquiries bring you. You can draw upon such a file when approaching prospects in the same area or in the same general line as the writers of the testimonials. The signer of the testimonial can say more for you than almost anything you can say for yourself.

> Dear Mr. Seaman:
> It is now eight months since we first started doing business together, and I note with satisfaction that the volume each month has been increasing nicely. At first, we were skeptical about the possibility of developing sales in your territory, because our product has been sold mainly in colder sections of the country. Your experience, therefore, has been gratifying.
> My purpose in writing is to find out whether you have any thoughts about how we can increase our volume to mutual advantage even further. As you can see, we're trying to work with you the best way we know how, and we'd appreciate hearing from you with any comments you may wish to make about our service and product. We like to receive brickbats as well as pats on the back. We can correct our faults—to the advantage of all concerned—only when they're pointed out.

The Inquiry Letter

Answers to inquiries are a major part of business correspondence, and can be the most important type of sales letter. Those that are part of a direct-mail sales campaign will be dealt with in the next section. Here we touch upon the type of inquiry that originates in other ways.

Someone in the market for your sort of goods or services has looked up your firm in a trade directory; or has had it recommended to him by one of your customers with whom he is acquainted; or has heard of you in some other way. He writes to you for information. His inquiry to you may be the only one he is making. But the chances are that he is simultaneously asking for similar information from your competitors.

It is wise to assume that that is the case, and that your answer must stand the test of competition. Do your best to make your reply a sales letter that wins the inquirer's business.

Promptness is of the first importance. Your prospect will be quite as much sold by evidence of your alertness and efficiency as by what you may say.

Directness is also important. Give specific answers to the questions. If the questions are vague, don't follow that bad example; be specific about what you have to sell and thus you will probably answer effectively the questions your prospect has not been able to express.

Being specific does not mean being detailed. Leave the details to the catalogue or the other enclosures you send. A good sales letter is organized to have a certain impact. It cannot have that impact if it interrupts itself to go into minutiae.

Enclosures

Your postage outlay pays for an ounce per unit of reading matter. That ounce gives you leeway for several sheets besides your letter which—barring necessary exceptions—will usually be less than a page in length. Businessmen have found it profitable to take advantage of the full permissible weight by adding enclosures that reinforce the sales punch.

The enclosures can be particularly useful in supplying details which, if put into the body of the letter, might blunt its impact. If the prospect had to pause, while reading the letter, to take in details of measurement, construction, delivery schedules, etc., his interest would be too diffused for him to react as you would like him to.

Your letter should do two things. It should put the prospect into the buying mood and whet his interest so that he will want to look up the details. These can be furnished in an effective enclosure.

However, avoid a clutter of accompanying "literature." Some mailers believe in the more-the-better principle. But experience has shown that beyond a certain point more can become too much. Then, no matter how colorful and clever the enclosures are, they begin to clash with one another. They distract attention from the letter. They even become a nuisance to the recipient—and the letter may lose its effectiveness.

Moreover, the enclosures should not overshadow the letter. The letter itself should be attractive to look at, but above all its copy should be so carefully, sensibly, and effectively prepared that it produces the results desired.

It is generally advisable, when dealing with a smaller enclosure, to fold it into the letter so that it comes out along with the letter when the envelope is opened.

Dear Mr. Merton:

I am going to make this letter brief. I feel the enclosed brochure speaks for itself. But I am writing merely to let you know that the sales potential of the lamp described has been tested carefully in thirty selected stores similar to yours. Every one of them has come back with quick reorders. So we know WE HAVE SOMETHING YOU CAN DO WELL WITH.

We developed this item with a view to shooting for volume. We've brought it out at the lowest price possible, and we have complete confidence in its sales potential.

We all get a steady stream of mail across our desks, but I hope you will take a few minutes to study the brochure carefully, and to try out a sample order of the lamp. We'll let the selling talk for itself.

Sincerely yours,

Ivan Hubbell

Form Letters

Whatever the special function of the sales letter you write, make it personal if possible. If the volume of the correspondence makes this impractical, use forms and methods that will make it appear like a personal letter.

There are two main kinds of form letters—complete and paragraph. The complete form, even when it is individually typed and signed, is prepared in advance to cover certain standard needs.

Usually complete form letters are produced on a word processor or xeroxed, depending on the purpose they serve. Word processing is useful in letters where spaces can be provided to fill in dates, individual salutations, addresses, etc. In virtually all cases, the name of an individual, even in rubber stamp or stencil reproductions, is preferable in the signature to simply the name of the firm.

Complete form letters are usually identified by some combination of letters or initials under which they can be filed. Thus there may be a series of form letters with which catalogues are to be enclosed. These are keyed with the letter C and their numbers in the series. Then the secretary can be instructed to send out Form Letter C-4.

The greater flexibility of the paragraph form letter makes it possible to meet a larger number of calculable special situations. Such a letter is assembled from designated prepared passages kept on file in a "paragraph book." Some firms have several paragraph books with hundreds of paragraphs in each.

For illustration let us take a paragraph book containing ninety passages. Of these, one to ten may be devoted to letter openings; eleven to forty may consist of second paragraphs; forty-one to seventy may consist of third paragraphs; and the remaining twenty entries may be closings. Thus a typist may be instructed to use 7: 24: 51: 82, and will construct the letter from corresponding paragraphs in the paragraph book.

Structure of the Sales Letter

In sales letters the same general principles of structure apply as in all business letters. But greater latitude is allowed in sales letters, just as greater latitude is allowed in the sales approach in general. You can be more unconventional and use more color and typographic tricks; and you will be pardoned a certain amount of puffing. Of course, if any one of these is carried to excess, it will prove self-defeating.

The salutation: One of the liberties that may be taken is with the salutation. In mass-mailings, where fill-in salutations and inside addresses are impossible, anonymous salutations such as Dear Friend, Dear Sir or Dear Madame may be used; or, if the list is a selected one permitting such specifications, Dear Doctor, Dear Business Executive, Dear Fellow-Angler, etc.

In some cases the salutation may be dispensed with and a flattering introductory phrase substituted for it, such as "To a Forward-Looking and Ambitious Young Businessman" or "To a Young Lady Who Keeps in Step with the Times." Or just a catchy headline like "Play Ball!" may be employed. However, these devices should be shunned in ordinary correspondence, and might be resorted to only where the multitude of identical letters is so great that individual salutations are impractical.

The opening: The opening is more crucial in a sales letter than in any other business correspondence. It is the sender's bid for attention; if it fails, the whole effort is wasted.

Some firms go to considerable trouble and expense in striving for attention-getting openings. In a conspicuous position on the letter they may have—stapled, glued on, or affixed in some other way—a small metal, cloth, or plastic object that pictorially symbolizes the opening line.

For example, one firm used a cord lasso, fastened to an upper corner of a letter so that the rope end touched the first line, to give animation to this opening: "Yes, we want to rope you in—and you'll be glad of it. . . ." Similarly a small aluminum bat glued to another letter helped to fix attention on this opening: "This is the season to go to bat for . . ."

Devices like these must be used with care for they are novelties that may appeal to some readers and by their "cuteness" irritate others. You may not be able to afford such expensive attention-getters; but still less can you afford a dull or lifeless opening. You can always attract attention with an imaginative thought and vivid words.

The question opening: One sure method is to put your opening in the form of a question. In that way you can take advantage of a quirk of human nature. We always react to a question as a challenge, and it is a rare person who does not feel the compulsion to make some response.

Of course the question should be provocative and relevant personally to the prospect, and should bring in the article or service being promoted.

This question opening was used by a home development company: "Are you over thirty, married, and a churchgoer?" Since the mailing list had been selected to concentrate on mature, married, churchgoing people, the reader was bound to answer "yes" and was thereby put in a receptive frame of mind to the rest of the proposition.

The striking statement: Another good type of opening is the striking statement. A good example is the one used, some twenty-five years ago, by the New York Daily News when it introduced itself and tabloid journalism to the metropolis. To its advertising prospects it sent a letter advising them to "Tell it to the Sweeneys" (through its pages) because "the Vanderbilts don't care." This was followed of course, with interesting material on the advantages of the mass market and its lower sales resistance.

Another example of the striking statement as an opening was the following, used in a letter to advertisers by a large woman's magazine: "Yes, men still carry on most of the nation's business—but their wives do still more of the buying!"

A proverb, too, can provide a good opening, especially when it is given an arresting new twist: "The early bird catches the worm—but was it wise for the worm to be early?"

Body of the letter: Having gained attention by your opening, you must next sustain interest while making sales points in the body of the letter.

The anecdote: Some writers have recourse to a story or anecdote for this purpose. An organization arranging outdoor exercise and entertainment for businessmen used this anecdote in a sales letter to its prospects:

"A vigorous man in his nineties was asked the secret of his longevity. 'Wal,' he replied, 'when my wife and I got married we agreed to do something to spare our nerves. If I was the grumpy one she'd go into the other room and take up her knittin'. And if she started to pick on me I'd put on my hat and go out for a walk. . . . So you see I been outdoors most of my life.'

"Being outdoors, that tried and true recipe for a long life and a healthy one, can be made easy for you by joining the _____Outdoors Club. (And equally easy for your wife as well, who won't be so inclined to pick on you if you include her.) Drive out in your own car or one of the Club's limousines will pick you up outside your office and bring you to the club grounds. Then you can swim, golf, swing a racket, walk or do anything else you like in clear sunlight and unpolluted country air."

Enclosures gave further details.

Facts and figures: Other writers rely on facts and figures. They support tempting descriptions of the article or service they are marketing with data giving the results of laboratory tests, consumption statistics, testimonials, guarantees, and other inducements.

Incidentally, experienced sales-letter writers advise that the core of the sales message should appear about two-fifths of the way down the letter.

The closing: In earlier business correspondence, in the days when businessmen dressed in frock coats and striped trousers like diplomats, it was considered proper to close sales letters with polite wishes like "hoping" or "trusting we shall hear from you." Such expressions tend to linger on. Usually they are left in mid-air as dangling participles. If you find them in your correspondence, pull out the blue pencil!

Sales letters now end with forceful suggestions for immediate action. They ask for the order; and they enforce it with all sorts of inducements, bargain offers, samples, free examination privileges, and a wide variety of other appeals.

Here is an example of the appeal of exclusiveness:

"There are many more than three thousand discriminating readers who will want this book, but only three thousand copies were printed. As this letter is being mailed, the day's orders reduce the number still available to 422. Better make sure of getting your free-examination copy by filling out and mailing the enclosed card today."

The "You" Attitude again: Among the numerous factors that contribute to effective correspondence, the "you" attitude, referred to earlier, is paramount. The seller takes care not to show his anxiety to make a sale. What he stresses is the buyer's interests. The buyer will get a bargain; he will be guaranteed against dissatisfaction by the privilege of returning the merchandise; payment will be made easy for him by special terms, etc. In sales letters as much as in any other form of business correspondence be sure to consider the reader at all times.

The postscript: In that same frock-coat-and-striped-pants business era alluded to above, the postscript was frowned upon. It was considered unkempt—allowable, perhaps, in private correspondence, but distinctly incorrect in well-dressed business correspondence.

Today, however, few sales letters are without postscripts. As a typographical device, the postscript has won general adoption because of the special services it can perform. It can remove from the body of the letter, whose unity it might impair, some special matter which should be brought to the reader's attention. Or it can give a needed emphasis to something as no other method can.

"P.S. Special discount terms can be arranged" stands out in a postscript, yet does not interfere with other persuasions as it might if set in the body of the letter. And if you have already mentioned your booth at a convention, a postscript reminder can do a lot to draw visits there: for example, "P.S. We're looking forward to seeing you at booth 16. Ask for Mr. Elkin."

"Letters You Don't Have To Write"

A recent speech by Maxwell C. Ross, a well known sales promotion expert, listed sixteen ways letters can be used to create good will—and, eventually, sales. "There's just one prerequisite," he said; "the person using them has to be a nice guy, courteous, friendly, and above all, sincere."

Each is simply a friendly, personal letter that you send on some occasion when nobody would have thought very much about it if you hadn't sent the letter at all. They don't have to be written, but they create a tremendously favorable impression because they are written.

1. You can use a letter to follow up a salesman's call. You don't need to, for it isn't expected, but you'll be surprised at the reception it gets. You could start something like this: "John Smith told me today of the pleasant visit he had with you about your insurance program. I know that John will do a fine job for you." Then finish off in your own words.

2. You can use letters to make appointments. You say, "It's about time for me to sit down with you, Jim, and go over your insurance in the light of the new tax changes. I want to do this when you have the time for it, but it should be soon. I suggest that we get together late Friday afternoon. How would 4 o'clock be?" You don't need to say much more, but you'll be surprised at the nice reception you get.

3. Whenever a customer or client has been promoted or changed jobs, it's a nice gesture to send a letter like this—"Congratulations on your appointment to District Sales Manager. This is fine news, and I know you'll do a great job. If I can ever be of any help to you, please let me know."

4. When a customer is ill, there's no more appreciated time to get mail. All you need to say is—"I'm certainly sorry to hear that you are laid up for an operation. I hope it won't be many days before you're back at your desk." Add to that a book, or the loan of one, a magazine, or a box of candy, and the good will you build is far above the effort you take in doing it.

5. When there is a death in the family. If it's tactfully done a short message of sympathy can mean much.

6. When a daughter or son gets married, or a new baby arrives. These letters make no tangible effort to sell; they're simply good-will builders—the kind that some day will bring something nice to you because you went out of your way to do something nice for somebody else.

7. When people buy a home, write to them. You letter doesn't need to be long or fancy. Perhaps: "I hope you are enjoying your new home, and that you have recovered from the trials of moving." If you have somethinag to sell, go ahead and mention it. Tell these folks you'd appreciate a chance to call when things are squared away. In some cases, an inexpensive gift like a small rosebush or a young tree creates far more good will than the cost.

8. When a customer has a birthday. Quite a few successful salesmen make a practice of keeping birthday lists and sending cards or letters. A personal letter is best, but if you use a card, write something in longhand on it.

9. When people move to your town a letter of welcome is an excellent source of new business. They don't know where to go for dry cleaning, laundry, milk—what service station to trade with, where to do their banking, or the nicer places to eat. So you write: "Welcome to Omaha. We know you'll like it here. If there is any way we can help you get settled, please let us know."

10. When people move from your town, it may seem a futile gesture to seem sorry—but the intangible good will you create may come back to you in unsuspected ways. And sometimes people do return. So you write: "I am sorry you are moving away from Lincoln. We will miss you as a customer, but should you ever return we'll be waiting to serve you again."

11. When you read about a customer in the newspaper, send him a letter. Clip the article, send it to him, and say: "I don't know whether your children keep a scrapbook of the nice things that happen to you, but just in case they do, here's an extra copy I clipped for you to give them." And if congratulations are deserved, give them!

12. When a customer is elected to some office, or honored in any other way, perhaps you would say: "I've heard some nice things about the work you've done for the Chamber of Commerce, so I was not surprised to see that you have been elected vice president for the coming year."

13. When someone has done you a favor he will appreciate a note from you. "Those two extra tickets got me off a rough spot. I hope I can repay the favor soon."

14. When some product or service pleases you, take time to write about it. "Quite often people write to you only with their complaints, but I wanted you to know how pleased I am with our new floor furnace, and with the courteous and efficient way your men installed it."

15. When a serviceman comes home write to him or to his parents if he lives at home. That's a small way to show your appreciation for all he has done for you and his country. Never again in his life will he so much want to be welcomed back; or want to feel that all he went through was not in vain.

16. You can use letters to thank new and old customers for their orders. Perhaps you do, but many don't. In Des Moines, a filling station operator sends a post card to new customers. All the card says is, "It was nice of you to stop at our station. I hope you'll come back often." That's all it needs to say.

Talent scout, G. L. Fultz, St. Louis' best dressed credit man, and staunch enemy of Whiskers and Goozle, says of the following assembled hogwash: "I know you will want to read this letter, for it's a dandy."

> "Thank you very kindly (who was kind?) for your letter of November 12th, just received. I am sorry that our bookkeeping department (mass production) erroneiously (new spelling) billed you for storage on the car that we handled for you. I am attaching corrected bill for which (?) I am sure you will find in order. Thanking you very kindly, we remain, very truly yours."

Miscellaneous Business Letters

Inquiries and Replies; Orders and Acknowledgments; Introduction and Recommendation; Social Correspondence in Business, Inter-Office; Good Will; Payments By Mail.

Routine Letters

In terms of quantity the largest part of business correspondence consists of routine letters—inquiries, replies to inquiries, orders and remittances, acknowledgments, bills, etc. In these letters the writer needs little art; the basic requirements are to be clear and accurate.

Inquiry Letters

Inquiry letters and replies to inquiries should be concise, simple, and direct, except in cases that call for sensitivity, judgment, or tact. An inquiry about the price of an article need do no more than ask the price. But an inquiry about credit standing or about a job opportunity, and the answers to such inquiries, require care and tact. Similarly answers to inquiries in mail-order campaigns, where the objective is to produce sales, call for thought and skill.

In ordinary inquiries, however, the important thing, on the part of the inquirer, is to phrase his question simply, precisely, and inclusively so that he can be told just what he wants to know, without extraneous matter; and also all that he wants to know so that he does not have to send further letters to fill out details. Similarly, the important thing on the part of the correspondent in answering such inquiries is to make the reply full and precise so that the inquirer does not have to come back to him to have matters cleared up or filled out.

If the information sought is adequately covered in a catalogue or booklet, enclose it in your reply and use the letter to refer to the paragraphs or pages dealing explicitly with the matter inquired about.

To facilitate quick comprehension both of the inquiry and the reply it is advisable to present them as separate items, allowing an individual paragraph for each.

If either the question or the answer is to be kept confidential, do not rely on the other person to guess it. Say so. Examles:

Gentlemen:

We are organizing a summer camp for boys and are in the market for 24 two-occupant portable tents for camping out. We are undecided whether to use conventional canvas tents, with which we are familiar, or your new nylon tents. Would you be good enough:

To send us whatever literature you have available on the construction of your nylon tents, accessory equipment, etc.

To inform us of their suitability to the summer climate of the Catskill Mountains, where the camp is located.

To furnish comparative weights and costs between canvas and nylon.

To give us an idea of the durability of your product with estimates of how many years of service may be expected in ordinary use.

We shall appreciate your referring us to customers who have had experience with your tents in conditions approximating those of the boys' camp in the Catskills.

Sincerely yours,
Arthur Ives

Gentlemen:

We are in the market for a line of work pants. We should like to know—

What fabrics you make up.

What colors.

Minimum orders accepted per size.

Terms (including discount for cash).

Please send us a swatch catalogue with your reply.

Sincerely yours,
Bruce Samuelson

Gentlemen:

My wife and I will be in New York for the Christmas week vacation. We are people of modest means—I am an associate professor at the University here. We should like good (not lavish) hotel accommodations in Manhattan, but a little out of the immediate railroad-terminal district. We would like to take in the theater (dramas, not musicals). We enjoy good cooking, preferably without noisy entertainment.

Would your bureau book reservations such as we describe and provide information about restaurants?

Could you send us a selected list of hotels that would come within our description, listing locations and price ranges for rooms for two?

Could you list the well-reviewed plays and the price range for seats in medium locations. Fortunately our vision and hearing are good.

If you can provide such services, we will send you, by return mail, our first and alternate choices of hotel and theater reservations and a check for whatever sum you may require for deposit.

Sincerely yours,
Howard Carver

Answers to Inquiries

Dear Mr. Alexander:

We thank you for your letter of August 16 about our line of women's belts.

We wish to call your attention to the perforated pages in the back of the enclosed catalogue containing information on terms and convenient order forms.

Ours is a quality line. It is used for accessories by manufacturers serving exclusive shops, and is stocked by the New York Fifth Avenue stores.

We hope to have the pleasure of serving you.

Sincerely yours,
A. S. Cantor

Dear Mr. Jones:

Because of the decline in demand we have discontinued manufacture of the "union suit" type of men's underwear.

As the enclosed catalogue illustrates, we carry a full line of the currently popular types of men's underwear in a wide range of styles, colors, and prices.

We will be happy to serve you.

Sincerely yours,
V. A. Miles

Dear Mr. Hector:

Since your letter does not make clear what your speech defect is, we are unable to furnish a specific answer.

Our public speaking course has been designed to help shy people who are not sure of themselves to speak readily and effectively in public. If your defect is among those associated with shyness, we are confident that the course will help you overcome it.

But if the defect is organic, that may require surgical treatment. If it is a long-standing problem, such as chronic stuttering, that may call for pyschiatric treatment. We recommend that you try to determine the cause with the aid of a physician or professionally qualified person.

But common difficulties in speaking—such as inability to face an audience, lack of practice of organizing a speech, unfamiliarity with the techniques of preparing material, groping for words, difficulties over parliamentary rules, etc.,—can be overcome by our course of study.

If you do not find the answer you require, please try us again with the questions put in more specific terms.

Sincerely yours,
Marc Rafferty

A final note: Though answers to inquiries need not be elaborate, they should avoid stuffy over-formality. For example, instead of "Acknowledging yours of the 20th requesting a copy of our booklet, Paint It Yourself, we wish to advise you that the booklet is being mailed to you forthwith," write something like: "We are pleased to send you our booklet, Paint It Yourself, which you requested on May 20. Its suggestions have been useful to people of good taste who must keep within a modest budget." Or, instead of "Yours of September 10 received and contents noted. Be advised that the matter has been put into the hands of our Sales Department from whom you should hear shortly," write something like, "Our Sales Department has your inquiry of September 10 and is assembling material which should be helpful in answering your questions."

Orders

Many firms use printed order forms. If for some reason a letter is needed to accompany or precede the order to add some specific instructions about the order, make the letter concise and unmistakably clear.

Where the letter itself constitutes the order, care should be taken to make it direct, clear, and accurate. To facilitate this it is advisable to arrange the items in tabular form, giving a separate line to each. Details of color, size, material, price, identifying mark or number, etc., should be precisely stated. Manner of shipment should be specified—whether by mail, express, freight, etc.

If the goods are needed by a certain date, if method of payment is, in any way, to differ from the customary procedure, if delivery is to be made to an address other than the regular mailing address, anything requiring specific instructions should be made clear, and should be given a separate paragraph to prevent its being misunderstood or ignored.

Where remittance is enclosed, attention should be drawn to it and its nature specified—whether it is by check, money-order, express-order, draft, cash, or stamps.

Even in letters transmitting orders for goods, ordinary courtesy and tact should be observed. In his book "Effective Letters in Business," Robert L. Shurter gives an example of a tactless order letter that drew a deservedly caustic reply: The letter—"Gents. Please send me one of them gasoline engines you show on page 785 and if it's any good I'll send you a check for it."

The reply—"Dear Mr. . . . Please send us the check and if it's any good we'll send you the engine."

Variations from ordinary punctuation are frequently used in orders. To compress items into single lines or a minimum number of lines, customary punctuation may be omitted and every possible abbreviation used. Names of separate articles are capitalized and also words that help to distinguish them from other kinds of goods of the same order. Thus Red will be capitalized to distinguish it from other colors an article may be manufactured in; or Wool to distinguish a garment in that fabric from garments in other fabrics. The objectives are conciseness and clarity and any typographic or grammatical means that promote these ends is justified.

Order Letters—Some Examples

Gentlemen:

Please rush to us to reach our stockroom next Thursday: 10 doz. Yo-yos, 50 checker sets, 50 anagram sets. This is for a special sales week which is going well. Our stock on these items is running out.

Our regular purchase order is being made out in the routine way and should reach you in a day or two; but please do not hold up delivery of this special order. A delay of even a few hours may mean lost sales.

Sincerely yours,
Kenneth Miller

Dear Mr. Bates:

The enclosed purchase order is in confirmation of the order we placed with you over the phone this morning. The order was phoned in to avoid delays. I must emphasize again that the shipment must reach us before October 4, when our sales will start.

Sincerely yours,
Seth Bellows

Gentlemen:

Please send us, for earliest possible delivery, the following goods selected from your latest catalogue. Charge my account.

3	doz.	Men's Nylon Hose, Black, asst. sizes @ $4.00	$12.00
3	doz.	Men's Nylon Hose, Blue, asst. sizes @ $4.00	12.00
3	doz.	Men's Nylon Hose, Brown, asst. sizes @ $4.00	12.00
1½	doz.	Men's Nylon Hose, Green, asst. sizes @ $4.00	6.00
4	doz.	Men's Cotton Hose, Black, Triangle Clocks @ $4.50	18.00

2	doz.	Men's White Broadcloth Cotton Shirts, asst. sizes @ $16.00	32.00
			$110.00

Ship freight.

Sincerely yours,
Charles Bloom

Acknowledgments

Dear Mr. Thayer:

Thank you for your order of October 5. As you instructed, it will be shipped freight, via the D & W. The order is being made up today and will be at the yards tomorrow. It should reach you well within the time you specified.

Sincerely yours,
J. H. Hudson

Dear Mr. Jones:

We have just telegraphed you the following: "Cannot ship your order May 10. Goods not available." The telegram was sent to minimize any inconvenience this may cause you. We can supply the cheaper grade, #43, on the date required. The earliest we can supply the #41 grade specified in your order would be June 11. If the #43 grade is all right, please wire collect and we will ship immediately.

Sincerely yours,
Adam Pierce

Dear Mr. Poynter:

Thank you for your order of August 14.

Unfortunately your letter did not specify which color or colors, and which weight or weights, you wish. In our Queen's Taste stationery line the colors are Rose, Fern, Mauve, Beige, Robin's Egg, Canary, Russet, Shell White, and Alpine Snow. The weights are Tissue, Regular and Baronial. Probably our catalogue was not at hand when you made out your order. We are enclosing another giving samples of each color and weight.

A prompt reply will be to our mutual advantage.

Yours sincerely,
Eric Hunter

Dear Mr. Magnes:

Thank you for your order for Clover Danish Blue Cheese. It is being shipped out to you today.

We enclose a catalogue of our other products. Please note that with orders of $10.00 or more, customers may receive, free, their choice of a jar of Lingonberry or Currant preserves.

Yours sincerely,
Einar Toksvig

Follow-Ups on Orders

Sometimes orders are poorly attended to and it is necessary, strange as it may seem, to jog the attention of the supplier. Here, again, as emphasized in the section on Complaints and Adjustments, an irritable tone is inadvisable, even where loss or inconvenience has been caused by the delay. A calm letter will get quicker and more favorable attention and will enhance the writer's status as a considerate customer whose patronage is worth retaining. It is seldom necessary to write more than one reminder; but when that becomes necessary, a sharper tone is not always politic, especially where the writer has reasons of his own for maintaining business relations with the ineffecient firm. Examples:

Gentlemen:

Although our order #216 was acknowledged on June 2, and it is now near the end of the month, the air conditioners have not yet arrived. We have already undergone a hot spell and soon July will be upon us. I cannot understand the delay or your leaving us without an explanation for your delay in delivery of such a seasonal article. Up to now your deliveries have been prompt; and expecting delivery any day, I did not write to you. There is no question now that I shall lose some sales and I expect you to make up for the lost time, not to speak of the lost business, by shipping the goods by express at your expense. Please wire what you plan to do in the matter.

Sincerely yours,
Edward Hines

Answers to follow-ups on orders should be prompt, and they should be tactful even where the tone of the complaining letter is disagreeable. Give the reason for the delay, assure the customer that care will taken to avoid such delays in the future, and specify the date and the manner of the planned shipment.

Dear Mr. Osgood:

We regret the delay in shippping out your order #644, dated February 10.

You probably have read of the recent labor troubles in the lumber industry. These made it difficult for us to secure proper crating materials for the goods. Rather than risk damage in transit we held up the shipment until satisfactory crates were available. We have now managed to get some from another source of supply. Even though our shipping costs have risen, we feel the added expense, like the delay, is preferable to having the machinery arrive in poor condition.

Your order was shipped out today, express. We hope it reaches you in good time as, we are confident now, it will reach you in good order.

Sincerely yours,
Mark Lyons

Letters with Enclosures

When remittance such as checks, etc., or when invoices or special notices are enclosed, the number of enclosures should be stated in the letter. This is customarily done in a separate line, at the left margin, under the signature.

Gentlemen:

The enclosed check for $146.00 is in settlement of our account to date. We also enclose your bill. Please receipt and return it.

Sincerely yours,
Joseph Evans

Gentlemen:

Thank you for your order #324 for a dozen Pop-Up Toasters. They were shipped today. The invoice is enclosed. We also enclose the catalogue on waffle irons requested in your letter.

Sincerely yours
Morton James

Letters of Introduction

Letters of introduction should not be given thoughtlessly. Avoid them unless you can feel that it would actually be in the interest of both parties to get acquainted. Good-natured people often do harm when they mean to do good, by writing letters of introduction indiscriminately. The tenth "promising" young chap sent to glean advice in the field of his ambition from a busy executive is likely to get a discouraging brushoff.

Therefore, the first consideration in writing a letter of introduction is whether to write it at all. Having decided that the letter should be written, you might well consider several other elements. Since the best way to present letters of introduction is in person, the envelope containing the introduction should be unsealed and should bear the name of the person to whom it is addressed and, in the lower left-hand corner, the line "Introducing Mr. . . ." This enables the recipient to welcome the caller by name and facilitates the relationship.

The letter should be brief and restrained. A long letter might impose an embarrassingly long wait on the caller while the letter is read. And extravagant statements about the caller, if they do not predispose the reader to skepticism, may evoke embarrassing comments of other sorts.

Sometimes there is a reason to mail the letter to the person addressed; for example, to allow him to appoint a time for the meeting. In that case a copy should be sent to the person being introduced so that he will be familiar with what has been said about him. Examples:

Dear Mr. Clements:

I hope you will have the time to see Mr. Wilbur, who was a student in my class this semester. You have several times expressed an interest in seeing "the cream of the crop" in each graduating class. It is because I can unreservedly place Mr. Wilbur in that category that I have suggested that he call on you.

Yours sincerely,
Roger Hessian

Dear Mr. Canning:

It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you Mr. Harvey Wright, who operates a large bottling plant in our city.

Mr. Wright is contemplating opening a branch in your city, and I could think of no one better for him to see than you for a quick survey of local conditions and prospects. My business association with Mr. Wright is now in its twelfth year and has led to a friendship which has enabled me to discover and appreciate his personal qualities.

I feel certain that any association this introduction may result in will be valued on both sides.

Yours sincerely,
Hiram Godkin

Letters of Recommendation

There are two main types of recommendation—the general recommendation "to whom it may concern," and the individual recommendation addressed to a specific person. The latter obviously is preferable, since the writer's personal acquaintance with the person addressed generally means that the letter will be given more attention than might otherwise be the case.

The best kind of recommendation is the one that performs a mutual service to the recommended person and the one to whom he is sent. So far as possible, therefore, it is well to find out beforehand whether and how the person about whom you are writing can be of service to the individual you are addressing.

Vital to any letter of recommendation is truthfulness and restraint. False statements are almost inevitably found out. In time they create handicaps that outweigh any temporary advantage that they gain for the person recommended. And exaggerated claims usually predispose the reader to skepticism and suspicion, and thus are often more injurious than helpful. Examples:

To Whom It May Concern:

Mr. Clarence Loman has been on our sales staff for the past eight years and has compiled an excellent sales record. He is a friendly person by nature and has won the friendship as well as the business patronage of his customers. We have convincing evidence of that from the letters we have received in response to the announcement of his retirement from traveling.

For reasons of health he cannot continue traveling, but he can serve in an inside position. We regret there is nothing of this kind available in our organization. He would make a crackerjack inside salesman and we can unreservedly recommend him to anyone in need of a person with real selling talents. It would take him no time to get a feeling of your stock and your methods; and to establish really friendly relations with customers. We are confident that he would be an asset to any firm that can use his services.

Very truly yours,
Martin Ullmann

Dear Mr. Carter:

I am taking the liberty of writing to you because I know that you sometimes give out manuscripts for first readings, and accepted manuscripts for preparations for the printer, to qualified young people, on a free-lance basis. I have heard that you do this, as a means of testing or training candidates for anticipated future openings in your editorial staff.

If that is the case, I feel that you will appreciate my sending Miss Ethel Willison to you. You have already become acquainted with her work and have even complimented her, without knowing it, when you complimented me on the excellent shape of the manuscript I turned in, and again, when I sent back corrected proofs. Miss Willison assisted me through all the stages of my book, and it is to her that I owe the smoothness and ease with which it went through all its stages.

Miss Willison has taken all the courses given here in preparation for a career in publishing and has applied what she learned, first on the college paper and, later, in helping other faculty members, as she has helped me, in preparing articles and books.

I am confident that she is just the kind of person you will look for when you are considering taking on a new editorial assistant. I take great pleasure in recommending her to you.

Sincerely yours,
David Proctor

Social Correspondence in Business

Though the phrase "strictly business" symbolizes freedom from emotional involvements in or out of business, the words connote an attitude or a goal, rather than the reality of business itself. It would be unnatural to expect that human beings, who spend most of their waking hours in business, would not form personal relationships of varying degrees of closeness in the course of their business. The truth is that most of the friendships men form in their mature years arise out of business contacts. And friendly qualities are recognized as assets in business.

This is so generally understood that trade associations of businessmen have the fostering of friendly cooperation as their major aim. Generally, too, a business relationship would hardly be accounted good or secure if it failed to develop some measure of personal regard between heads or representatives of the two firms.

Consequently, there are many occassions for letters that should not be "strictly business," although they are essential to the conduct of business. Examples are given in the following pages:

Letters of Congratulations

Dear Mr. Leonard:

What a pleasure it was to see the item in The Times business section this morning about your promotion to the position of Sales-Manager. Actually I think I ought to write to the President of your concern, Mr. Tate, to congratulate him. He had the good sense to recognize a good man. From what I know about people in the field he couldn't have picked a better man. Congratulations on a well-deserved promotion.

Dear Mr. Slocum:

I don't know how others are reacting to the news in this morning's real-estate section, but I want to congratulate you on taking such a far-sighted and enterprising step. I have already heard some say that the site is too remote for such a development, but I put them with those who once thought Forty-second Street was too far outside the city. I think you have judged correctly that the site is directly in the path of the city's future growth.

Again, my congratulations and my best wishes for the success of a project which should serve the community as well as bring you well-deserved returns.

Admiringly yours,
Edmund Gates

Letters of Sympathy and Condolence

Dear Walter:

When your secretary called this morning to tell me that you wouldn't be able to keep our appointment because of your sudden illness, I was deeply disturbed. She told me that you were to spend some days in the hospital, under observation, to determine whether an operation will be necessary. I hope the tests indicate no such necessity and that you will be back in your office very soon and in condition to renew our postponed engagement.

Cordially yours,
Arthur Reinhardt

Dear Mrs. Rodd:

It was a hard blow to us, too, to hear of your husband's death. We missed him here, very much, two years ago, when he retired. During our association with him over the twelve years that he was with us, all of us developed the highest regard for his wonderful qualities. We can fully understand how deeply you must feel his loss. But it must be a consolation to you that his last years were serene. We and his other friends feel grateful to you for having contributed so much to making him so happy.

Sincerely yours,
Charles U. Clifford

Dear George:

I was very sorry to receive the sad news of your great loss. I know that nothing anyone may say at a time like this can assuage your deep grief, but I hope that you will soon find abiding comfort in the high regard everyone had for your father's accomplishments, and in the good health, happiness, and achievements of those dear to you. I hope you will have no more sorrow for many years to come.

Sincerely yours,
Frank

Dear Mr. Cass:

I have just learned of the emergency appendicitis operation you have had to undergo. I had Miss Hale phone the hospital immediately and was reassured to hear that there were no complications and that you are getting along nicely.

That's fine and we want to keep it so. Therefore, I want it understood that no matter how good your recovery is, you are not to come back to the office until the doctor, on his most conservative estimate, tells you you may. And don't think of the office. This is an order!

In the meanwhile, to help you pass the time, there will be a package of books at the hospital. The well-read Miss Hale did the choosing and I think she has a good idea of your taste.

With all best wishes,
Robert E. Griffin

Accepting Invitations

Dear Mr. Canby:

It will be a pleasure to see you when I visit New York next month. Thank you for suggesting it. Indeed one of the prospects that made the trip so pleasing to me was the opportunity it might give me to become acquainted with you personally.

Sincerely yours,
Elmer Robinson

Dear Sir:

I consider it a great honor to be asked to speak at the Credit Men's Luncheon next month. Thank you very much.

I hope the enclosed data are what you need for the newspaper release. And I will be on hand an hour before the start of the luncheon, as you suggest, to talk over the details of the program.

Yours very truly,
Leon Hart

Declining Invitations

Dear Mr. Hopkins:

Unfortunately I will be out of town during the week of March 10 and will not be able, therefore, to be present at the reception celebrating the opening of your new store. Since I will not be there to offer my congratulations to you in person, permit me to do so here. And I wish to add my sincere best wishes for the success of the new store and the continued growth of your business.

Sincerely yours,
Anthony Asch

Dear Mr. Mann:

It is with deep regret that I must decline the great honor of organizing and heading the committee to arrange a reception for the Vice-President, who is to be one of the speakers at our coming convention. As you may have heard, Mr. Bixby, head of our Foreign Department, died suddenly last week. I have had to take over his duties temporarily, which for the present rules out any other activities for me. I will let you know as soon as I am free again for any service to the organization.

Sincerely yours,
Horace Seton

Resignations

Dear Sir:

I have just been appointed Coordinator of Sales for our firm. This will mean extensive traveling in order to keep in continual contact with our stores throughout the country. It will, therefore, be impossible for me to continue to serve as secretary of the club. And, so, with deep regret, I must tender my resignation from that office.

It has been a pleasure to serve the club during the past four years, and I have enjoyed and profited from the association with its able officers and members. Needless to say, I will be on hand for every get-together my new duties will permit.

Sincerely yours,
Edwin Robbins

Dear Sir:

I have agreed to serve on the Mayor's Committee for Emergency Housing. Since it may prejudice the value of the work I can do for the committee, if I continue as a member of the firm, I am submitting my resignation to take effect immediately.

This is a step I take not without regret, for the years I have been privileged to spend with the firm have been happy ones. But I feel that the opportunity afforded me by the Mayor to serve the community in so important a sphere of activity is one that I cannot pass up.

Sincerely yours,
Alan W. Furness

Inter-Office Correspondence

In concerns of any size a good many memos pass between departments, between the management and the staff, between individuals in different departments, etc. Thus the Stock Department may inform the Sales Department of the arrival of certain needed goods; or the management will send memoranda to department heads about certain changes of policy; or it may send a memo to the entire staff about price changes, the announcement of a special holiday, etc.; or a salesman may send a note to Shipping giving special instructions regarding the shipment of an order; or Promotion may send a memo to Sales and other departments concerned, reminding them of the start of a national advertising campaign so that they can prepare for the anticipated inquiries and orders.

Most firms provide printed forms and restrict inter-office correspondence to one subject only in order to encourage conciseness and clarity and to facilitate filing and reference. The printed forms also assure that the date, the department, the person, and the subject are clearly indicated. This makes salutations and signatures superfluous and they are omitted except in memoranda with a deliberately personal touch.

Although such notes are "stripped for action," the tone should nevertheless always be courteous. Inter-departmental feuds have often begun over tactless expression in such memoranda. And office morale has sometimes been damaged by an unintended curt note by management. Certain indispensible formalities of respect should be observed in inter-office correspondence as in other forms. Examples:

Form G-14 Inter-Office Memorandum To: Department: Subject:	One Subject Only Made Simple Books Inc. From: Department: Date:

To: Staffs Department: Sales, Correspondence Subject: New Price List	From: J. B. Wolcott Department: Management Date: April 10, 1954

On May 1, our new price-list goes into effect. Copies should be in the hands of all our salesmen before the end of the week and in the hands of our dealers by April 28. Copies can be obtained from Miss Andrews.

To: Staffs Department: All departments Subject: July 4 Holiday	From: G. E. Anderson Department: Personnel Date: July 1, 1954

Since July 4, this year, falls on a Sunday, the office will be closed Monday, July 5, to allow a full holiday weekend.

To: Mr. Taylor, Mr. Green, Mr. Johns, Mr. Maxfield Department: Sales, Shipping, Personnel, Accounting Subject: Advertising campaign	From: Edward Earnshaw Department: Promotion Date: February 10, 1954

This weekend our special advertising campaign on our new Infra-Red cooker opens with full pages in the magazine supplements of metropolitan newspapers. There will be page ads in leading national magazines, along with other promotion: Most of the advertising will carry keyed coupons. Your departments should be prepared for the special load of mail that will come in. Just a reminder.

To: E. Dirksen Department: Shipping Subject: Johnson Brothers order	From: J. Meyers Department: Sales Date: January 11, 1954

Dear Ed:

When Billing sends down the Johnson Brothers' order, please put a note on it to double wrap the shipment. Old Mr. Johnson complains that our wrapping paper isn't thick enough. The trouble is in his storeroom, which is a filthy damp place. So it'll be best to double wrap his stuff, or he'll come back at us with claims for spoilage. Hope it's not too much bother. Thanks.

Joe

It might be noted, in passing, that in large corporations or organizations, intra-company mail is frequently placed in heavy-stock envelopes that can be used over and over again. These envelopes have ruled lines on the outside, and the sender need merely place on the first free line the name and department of the person to whom the communication is addressed. That person in turn can use the same envelope by doing similarly the next time he wishes to dispatch a memo or some papers to another person in the organization.

Good-Will Letters

It should be enough, of course, to service customers promptly and efficiently. Yet it is human for them to want to be appreciated as well and to be given personal attention. If thanking a customer for his order has been overlooked, write him a special note of appreciation for his business.

Letting customers feel that they are "in" on your operations is another way of building their good will. If you are expanding your business, or promoting a man on your staff with whom your customers may have had occasion to become acquainted, or if you are making any operational change of interest to them, let your customers know about it.

If you are making gifts—calendars, personal memo-pads, initialed pencils, etc.,—to new customers, don't leave the old customers out. Give it to them, also.

There are also occasions and circumstances that might be used for the promotion of good will by drawing attention to them. We have already mentioned letters of congratulation and letters of sympathy and condolence. Watch significant dates in the lives or careers of customers, when it is possible or advisable—anniversaries of the concern, birthdays of the officers, marriages in their families, and send congratulations and appropriate gifts.

Send Christmas greetings to all customers, and mail them well in advance of the rush period, so that they don't come so late as to seem like afterthoughts.

Unusual occurrences may be made the occasion for a good-will note. Thus when Lever Brothers were constructing their striking New York building, they sent letters to all in the neighborhood within range of the sounds of construction, private families in nearby residential blocks as well as business neighbors, apologizing for the noise. They gave assurance that everything was being done to finish the building as soon as possible and that all avoidable construction sounds were being eliminated.

During the recent period of rapid and successive price boosts some firms notified their customers that they were not raising their prices though raw-material costs had risen; and others explained what they were doing to absorb part of the necessary price advances in operational economies.

Good will within an organization is as important as the good will of outside customers and neighbors. Well run concerns make use of their inter-office correspondence to keep up office morale through informational memoranda that make the staff feel they are part of what is happening: through announcements that will please the staff; and through personal notes of congratulation from management on pleasant occasions, such as the birth of children, the graduation of sons, etc.; and condolences in bereavements. Examples:

Dear Mr. Smythe:

The enclosed is the latest issue of our house organ, Cuttings. I am sure you will be interested in the piece on page twelve, on the old Smythe Tool Works which, I believe, were founded by your great-grandfather.

Would you like to get Cuttings regularly? I'd have it sent without asking if it weren't for my own experience. I groan at the amount of unsolicited mail I get from people who send it with the best of intentions; there aren't enough hours in the day to read everything that comes through the mail. So for that reason I have made it a policy to send Cuttings only if customers let us know that they want it. Incidentally, I shall be happy to send you as many copies of this issue as you may require.

Sincerely yours,
Gabriel Harcourt

Dear Mr. Connor:

It occurred to me, recently, that it was just about ten years ago that I entered your first order with our company in our order book. I was not then sales manager, of course—that came as the result of the good orders you and other friendly customers favored me with.

To make sure, I had my secretary look it up, and it turned out, sure enough, that our business connections did begin ten years ago, this month! That first order, incidentally, was for an assortment of our fans. Your latest order is for air conditioners! Time does move.

If we could get together, we'd be celebrating the glad occasion properly at Ludlow's or Keen's. But since that's not possible, here's the next best thing. Please join me in a glass of champagne of a kind I've found particularly palatable. A case of it should be in your office this morning if American Express is on its toes.

Your health and best wishes for ten more good years of business together.

Cordially,
Ed Schacht

Dear Mr. Alter:

We prepared a map for use by our office staff of the new city postal zones. It proved to be such a convenience that we decided to print up copies for our customers. Here's your copy and we hope you'll find it useful.

Sincerely yours,
Conrad Dietrichstein

Dear Mr. Freud:

As a customer of the Hooker Hat Company you will be interested to know that we have just completed negotiations which bring this fine firm into our organization. It was our desire to fill out our line of men's furnishings with a quality hat line, and Hooker was our choice.

We were glad, of course, that with so fine a product we could make the acquaintance of new customers appreciative of fine quality apparel for men.

We want to assure you that you will continue to receive the efficient service you have become accustomed to from the Hooker staff (which is being preserved intact), plus, we venture to add, special services made possible by the facilities of our larger organization.

On his next call your Hooker salesman will have our other lines of quality goods to offer you. We are mailing you our catalogue so that you may become acquainted with them. Any orders you wish to place from the catalogue will be credited to the salesman's account, and you will be billed on the same terms as in your account with Hooker.

Please let us know if there is any way that we can be of service to you. I look forward to the continuance of what I hope will be a pleasant and profitable relationship for us both.

Sincerely yours,
A. E. Handley

Dear Mr. Gates:

Thank you for your order number 112, which arrived this morning. It will be shipped today; the invoice is enclosed.

The same company is making a new line of waffle irons, and the introductory offer is so attractive we decided to call it to the attention of all our customers. We have tested the device and found it sturdy and efficient. We are enclosing a circular giving the details. Perhaps you'll want to take advantage of this offer.

Sincerely yours,
Morton James

Dear Mr. Magnus:

Thank you for your order of Clover Danish Blue Cheese. It is being shipped to you today.

I think you will be interested in seeing a copy of a periodical we issue, Good Cheer, which contains recipes and notes about new European delicacies being introduced to American lovers of good foods. If you would like to receive it regularly, we shall be glad to put you on our mailing list.

Sincerely yours,
Gail Longinetti

Requests for Charity

Although the solicitation of contributions for charity is a highly specialized, professional activity these days, businessmen frequently have occasion to sell theater tickets or to ask for donations for a pet organization. In such cases make your letter brief; leave the "selling" to the professional fund-raiser. You will get a check because the person you are writing to knows you, and values your friendship or patronage. Some examples:

Dear Mr. Adams:

I am taking the liberty of sending you the enclosed advertising blank in behalf of the United Orphans League. I am very much interested in the organization and know of its good work and great need. I shall appreciate your check to the best of your ability. With many thanks and good wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,
Sam Laury

Dear Ben:

Enclosed are a couple of tickets for "Ah, Take the Cash." The seats are not so good, and I don't know anything about the show, but the cause is good. So I'd appreciate your taking the tickets and letting me have your check for $20 made out to the Community Chest. I hope you will enjoy the show and have the double satisfaction of knowing you've aided a worthy cause.

Sincerely yours,
Norman Rich

Although it is desirable to keep letters of this type short, they can vary in tone, length, and appeal if in the judgement of the writer, the nature of his relationship with the person to whom he is writing requires more than the semi-formal approach illustrated above.

Example of an Acceptance Letter

Dear Mr. Bingham:

I am happy to send you the enclosed check for the theater tickets you sent me. I know the cause is a good one, and I hope the project is a success. Keep up the good work.

Sincerely yours,
David K. Nelson

Words and Expressions to Avoid

Superfluous, Overformal, Flabby, Tactless, Hackneyed Language

According to our records—Often superfluous and can be omitted.

Acknowledge receipt of your letter—Overformal. Better, We thank you for your letter.

(Please) advise—Better inform or tell unless actually soliciting advice.

Agreeable to your letter—Old fashioned.

Along these lines—Better, the gist of his remarks or simply like.

Amount of, preceded by in the, to the, for the—Better say check or remittance for $_____.

(Please) arrange to return—Sufficient to say, please return.

As per your letter—As per is a legal term, therefore out of place in an ordinary letter. Better, according to or as mentioned in.

As stated above—Better to repeat what you stated, or as I have mentioned.

As yet—For yet.

Assuring you of—Old fashioned.

As to—Awkward.

At all times, at this time—Usually superfluous.

At hand—Usually superfluous.

Attached you will find—Overformal. Better, we are attaching or we are enclosing.

At the present time—Now is preferable.

At this writing—Formal. Better now.

At your earliest convenience, at an early date, at the earliest possible moment—Overformal. Better say soon.

Awaiting your favor—Better, please let us hear from you soon.

Beg—Relic of old-fashioned courtesy, now abandoned in business correspondence.

Claim—Avoid in the sense of to assert or assertion; might antagonize.

Communication—Formal. Better, message, letter, report, inquiry, etc.

Complaint—Aggressive sound. Usually better to say request for adjustment.

In compliance with your request—Overformal.

Contents noted—Superfluous.

(To) date—Overformal. "To date we have not received"—better, we have not yet received.

Deal—Improperly used for transaction.

It is desired that we receive—Inactive, weak, and long-winded. Better, we want to receive or we'd appreciate receiving.

We have duly investigated—Duly is superfluous.

Each and every—Each or every is sufficient by itself.

Early date—May mean two or three days or two or three weeks. Better be specific.

Enclosed please find—Better here is or I enclose.

Esteemed—Old-fashioned.

Even date—(meaning today). Better be specific. Say your letter of this morning or of December _____ 19 _____.

Event—Avoid "in the event that." If is preferable.

Favor—In sense of letter—old-fashioned, better say your letter of _____. Only proper, nowadays, when referring to a specific act of kindness.

For the reason that—Because is preferable.

Forward—Send or ship are preferable.

For your information—Superfluous. Omit.

Hand you—Send out check or enclose our check preferable.

Have for acknowledgement—Simpler to say "thanks."

Herewith—Superfluous.

Tie-in Sale—Where additional product must be purchased to effect purchase of a certain article.
Title—All factors combined which accord right to exclusive possession of property.
Tool Engineering—New branch of engineering concerned with perfecting new machinery processes, equipment and use of raw material in preparation for production of a new product or a new model.
Tracer—Investigation designed to trace article undelivered by post office or transportation company; one who makes such an investigation.
Trade Acceptance—Bill of exchange governing purchase price, drawn by seller upon buyer whose endorsement constitutes "acceptance."
Trade Agreement—Agreement between employer and union, fixing wages, hours, working conditions.
Trade Edition or Trade Book—Edition designed for general public as distinguished from educational and professional use.
Trademark—Coined name, monogram, logotype, signature, picture, distinctively designed words or name, symbol, emblem or device, which may be registered in the Government Patent Office for exclusive use by the applicant. Registration term is 20 years and may be renewed.
Trade Name—Name or other symbol under which a firm does business and protected by common law against attempt to deceive customers by use of a similar name by a competing firm.
Trade Paper—Endorsed notes (two or more names) given in payment for merchandise; a periodical published in the interest of a certain branch of business.
Transcript—Letter-perfect copy of a document, which does not seek to reproduce exact appearance of original.
Travelers Checks—Issued by banks, travel agencies, American Express, and Western Union for the convenience of travelers.
Treasury Bills—Short-term government offerings, bearing no interest, but sold at a discount to buyers.
Treasury Certificates—Interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness issued in place of short-term bonds.
Trust—Holding of property by a responsible person or bank (trustee) for the good of another person (beneficiary).
Turnover—Number of times, within a specified period such as a year, in which a given commodity is sold out.
Upgrade—To advance an employee, a work process or a product in rank, earnings, price or quality.
Venue—Place where case is tried. A change of venue may be granted with the object of securing a fairer trial.
Volume—Amount of business done.
Voucher—A receipt or other proof of money paid, vouches for the accuracy of the terms of a transaction.
Wages—Payment for labor.
Waive—To voluntarily forego a right.
Warrant—Order for the payment of money or delivery of goods or documents; in banking, primarily written order for the payment of money.
Wash Sale—Fictitious trading to give an appearance of activity to inactive stocks.
Wharfage—Fee for use of piers.
Wholesale—Sale of goods to dealers for resale to retail merchants.

Will—Testament of a property-holder directing the distribution of his property after his death.

Window Dressing—Manipulations in financial statement to give it a more favorable appearance than is due.

Withholding Tax—Income tax payment deducted at source, as from wages, dividends, etc.

Without Prejudice—A contract term signifying that the agreement will not injure any prior or subsequent rights.

Zoning—Laws governing real estate, setting off special areas for special types of occupation; e.g., residence, business, hospitals, etc.

Wills and Estate Planning

Everyone should have an up-to-date will that reflects an estate plan adapted to individual needs and circumstances. The estate plan is a thoughtfully designed arrangement for the distribution of one's assets in such a way as to achieve maximum realization of the planner's objectives. These can include keeping taxes at a minimum; providing financial management for the benefit of a surviving widow and children; selection of a trusted relative, friend, or advisor as executor or guardian; and so on. An estate plan can be simple and inexpensive to draw up; for a larger estate or one with special problems the plan may be extremely complex.

Most persons or couples of reasonable means should have an estate plan—and a will or wills as integral parts of that plan. But whether it is part of an estate plan or not the will is ordinarily a written document that takes effect on the death of the testator, the legal term for the person making out a will. The will's purpose is to distribute one's worldly assets to those whom the testator desires or "wills" to have them.

The estate plan may deal with broader categories of assets than the will. The estate plan may, for example, have provisions covering gifts, insurance, and annuities, special types of contracts such as those providing for the purchase of a business by surviving associates, trusteeship arrangements, and other devices designed to accomplish the testator's purposes. The estate plan may also provide for changes in the estate to be made before the planner's death. The will generally takes effect only on the testator's death.

Estate Planning: Four Main Tools

You can make a beginning toward estate planning by considering the four main tools a planner can use. The four are trusts, lifetime gifts, joint ownership, and wills. Other tools are, of course, available, and each has a valid purpose. Under specific arrangements, for example, death benefits may be paid to named beneficiaries under pension plans, profit-sharing programs, IRAs, tax-sheltered annuities, and deferred compensation arrangements. Some estates use irrevocable living trusts or buy-sell agreements dealing with businesses.

Adding It Up. In general, property is anything you can own. Everything you own belongs in your estate. That includes both real property, or real estate, meaning both land and all the things that are permanently attached to the land, and personal property. The latter includes tangibles, those items that have bulk or substance, and intangibles, things without physical substance. Among common tangibles are furniture, an automobile, cameras, clothing, a boat, and so on. Intangibles are such items as stocks, bonds, life insurance policies, and bank deposits.

A first step in estate planning involves inventorying all your property of whatever kind. With each item you should note the value or estimated value. You should also indicate how the property is owned—outright, in joint tenancy, or otherwise.

Objectives. What do you want to accomplish when you plan your estate? Your objectives should be clear; they often determine what methods you will use to transfer your property, or specific parts of it, to your spouse, relatives, friends, charities, or other beneficiaries. At the least you will want to know who your heirs will be and what each heir will receive.

Some specific objectives help to shape estate plans. A property owner may want to provide financial support for dependents, including both money to live on and funds that would be available in emergencies. Nearly all estate planners hope to reduce such estate transfer costs as federal estate and state inheritance taxes, the expenses of administering the estate, and others. Very basically, a valid objective is to ensure that the estate will have sufficient assets to meet its obligations.

Other objectives may seem obvious. As noted, you will want to name the person or persons who will administer or settle your estate after your death—and under what terms. The disposition of closely held business interests should be provided for. Finally, property distribution should make up parts of the estate plan.

Tool 1: Trusts

As one of the key tools of estate planning, trusts play unique roles. Whatever the type of trust, and there are many kinds for persons in many economic categories, the typical trust instrument places legal title in one person, called the trustee, and equitable title in another person, the beneficiary. In each case the "person" may be an individual, a corporation, group, or organization. The grantor (or creator or settlor) who establishes the trust gives the trustee the right to hold and administer the trust corpus, or principle, for the benefit of the other person or entity.

Three main kinds of trusts are used by the estate planner: living, or inter vivos ("between the living"), trusts; testamentary trusts established by will; and insurance trusts. Living trusts are set up while the grantor is alive, and take effect at once. Testamentary trusts take effect on the grantor's death. The corpus of the insurance trust consists of funds from an insurance policy—or funds to be paid out under an insurance policy or policies—and, possibly, other property as well.

Why a trust? To some extent the reasons parallel those that justify estate planning itself. Among the reasons:

- To protect spendthrift heirs or other beneficiaries who may be mentally, physically, or emotionally unable to manage property. The trustee can have total management responsibility.
- To enable the trustee to use discretion and, often, expert knowledge in managing trust property for the benefit of heirs, the grantor, and family members or others.

- To have a device for giving or leaving property to minors with the assurance that the trustee will manage the property until the beneficiaries are old enough to handle the property themselves.
- To take all or part of your estate property out of probate and in that way to save your heirs the costs and delays of going through the probate process.
- To set up a useful tax-saving plan.

Tax Savings

Depending on your financial status and the complexity of the trust you want to set up, you could pay from $100 to $10,000 or more to an attorney to prepare your trust agreement. On average, you would pay about $300 to $500.

Such an expense could definitely be worth it. Remember that the federal government has provided that estates of $500,000 or less were to escape estate taxes in 1986. That figure was to rise to $600,000 in 1987 and subsequent years. In one case a couple had property worth $800,000, all in the husband's name. Assuming that the husband dies first, in 1987 or later, the entire estate passes to the wife. The so-called marital deduction allows whole estates of whatever kind to pass to a surviving spouse tax-free. But when the wife dies a different rule applies.

On the wife's death in 1987 or later, the federal exemption would apply only to the first $600,000 of the $800,000 estate. At rates in effect in 1986 the couple's heirs would pay $52,000 in estate taxes on the remaining $200,000.

This couple could have saved all $52,000 in federal taxes by establishing a trust. The couple would have had several choices, including these:

- A bypass trust that would set aside $600,000 of the husband's estate as the trust principle, with income from the trust and part of its principle going to the wife during her lifetime. The other $200,000 in the husband's estate would go directly, on his death, to the wife for her unrestricted use. On the wife's death the trust would dissolve and the entire estate would be distributed to the beneficiaries free of federal taxes.
- A marital deduction trust, with either of two kinds available: a general power of appointment trust or a so-called QTIP (qualified terminable interest property) trust. Again the couple's beneficiaries would pay no federal estate taxes on the death of the second spouse.

Under the general power of appointment trust, your spouse can decide after you die who will receive the trust's assets after he or she dies. The QTIP, by contrast, makes it possible for you to select the ultimate trust beneficiaries. With the QTIP you can make sure, if desired, that your spouse will not cut off your children by an earlier marriage. Otherwise the general power of appointment and the QTIP trust are virtually identical. Both, for example, qualify for the marital deduction and are included in the surviving spouse's estate. Both also produce income that must go to the surviving spouse.

- A generation-skipping trust, under which trust income goes to a grantor's children rather than to the wife and the principle goes to the grantor's grandchildren.

In many cases a grantor can use an irrevocable life insurance trust under which the proceeds from insurance policies are removed from the grantor's estate, to be distributed after the second spouse's death to the named beneficiaries. The spouse receives income from the trust until he or she dies.

Selecting the Trustee

The problem of selecting a trustee usually resolves into a choice between an individual and a corporation. The individual, whether the creator of the trust or someone else, might be closer to the trust beneficiaries than a corporate trustee—and might therefore be more responsive to the beneficiaries' needs. The individual might not even charge a fee. Under any circumstances, the person or persons serving as trustees could, as needed, obtain legal, investment, accounting, and other advice from experts.

The corporate trustee could offer different advantages. Such trustees are professional money and property managers. Unlike the individual trustee, they do not, usually, die or become incapacitated; personnel changes do not interrupt their services. Beyond that, they remain unbiased, independent of family pressures, and able to answer to charges of mismanagement. By comparison with the individual trustee who is also a trust beneficiary, the corporate trustee cannot incur personal income tax liabilities in administering trust property. A corporate trustee can, of course, act as cotrustee with an individual or individuals.

Tool 2: Gifts

Lifetime gifts function much like trusts. Essentially, they reduce the value of your estate and thus help to avoid estate taxes. An important difference, however, is that your surviving spouse has no access to the money you have given away. Thus most persons make certain that the surviving spouse will have enough income to live on after the first spouse's death.

In the 1980s the federal government liberalized the laws regulating gifts of property or money. In 1986 individuals could give up to $10,000 each to as many persons as they chose. For couples, the law allowed joint gifts of as much as $20,000 each to any number of donees. You need not report gifts of less than $10,000 to the Internal Revenue Service, but must (whether individual or couple) report all gifts exceeding that sum. After your death, the IRS will add up all the taxable gifts—those exceeding $10,000 per year per person—that you made during your lifetime and (if applicable) subtract the total from your $600,000 (1987) estate tax exemption.

Kinds of Gifts

You can give gifts in many different ways. A charitable remainder trust is actually a way to give assets to a charity while ensuring that you or your beneficiaries will receive the income from the gift property for a specified period. At the end of the period the trust dissolves and the charity receives the principle. Very wealthy persons may use a GRIT (grantor retained income trust) that sets aside part of the grantor's estate as a gift to a family member or friend. The grantor receives the income from the gift property for a specified period, whereupon it passes out of his or her estate and into the ownership of the beneficiary.

A third method of giving away assets operates on a principle opposite to that of the remainder trust. This charitable lead trust provides that a charity will receive the income from the specified property—but not the principle. When the trust ends, your heirs receive the principle. You arrange for a charitable lead trust in your will. Often, your estate enjoys even larger tax deductions than it would under a remainder trust.

Tool 3: Joint Ownership

Joint ownership of property offers both advantages and disadvantages that should be considered in estate planning. Joint ownership (a legal device that exists when two or more persons have ownership rights in property) allows that property to pass automatically to the other joint owner or owners outside the probate estate of the first owner to die. The device thus saves the time and expenses often involved in the probate process.

Other advantages may be noted. Some states levy lower inheritance taxes, or no taxes, where property is held jointly. Usually, too, the survivor receives jointly held property free of the claims of the creditors of a deceased joint owner.

Joint, Outright, and Community Property Ownership

Joint ownership is one of four basic ways in which real or personal property may be owned. The other three are outright ownership, community property ownership or rights, and tenancy in common. The three types of joint ownership or tenancy include:

Joint Tenancy with Right of Survivorship. Under joint tenancy with right of survivorship (WROS), the property interest of a descedant passes with his or her death to the surviving joint owner or owners. A married couple typically own their home jointly. When one dies, the property interest of that deceased passes to the survivor, who then owns the property outright in his or her own name.

A joint tenant can destroy the survivorship aspect of a joint tenancy. For example, if one joint tenant sells his or her share in property to a third party, that person and the remaining joint tenant own the property as tenants in common (see below).

Tenancy by the Entirety. A second form of joint tenancy is tenancy by the entirety. Some states provide for this special kind of joint ownership when a wife and husband own property jointly and exclusively. Tenancy by the entirety differs from joint tenancy with right of survivorship in three key ways: the former can only exist between husband and wife; in many states the survivorship rights can be terminated only with the consent of both parties; and, again depending on the laws of the particular state, the husband may have control over the property (and the right to any income from it) during their lifetimes.

Other Joint Interests. Where joint bank accounts or jointly owned government savings bonds are concerned, the owners may again have rights of survivorship. Thus family members commonly hold both types of property under this joint ownership arrangement. With a bank account, either party can make deposits or withdraw funds. On the death of one, the survivor becomes sole owner of the account by operation of law.

With savings bonds, a similar rule applies. Both joint owners have survivorship rights even though the bonds may be registered in co-ownership form and held in the name of "A" or "B." Either A or B could cash the bonds during the lifetime of the other.

Tenancy in Common

Under tenancy in common arrangements, no co-owner has survivorship rights: none acquires the interest of another in case of the other's death. Rather, the interest of a decedent goes to the decedent's heirs as if the interest had been owned outright. The survivor retains his or her share. Tenants in common can own proportionate interests in property—for example, 75 percent and 25 percent respectively.

In outright ownership, one person owns property exclusively in his or her name. Community property is discussed below.

Not a Will

Despite some advantages, joint ownership does not take the place of a will. In cases on record, couples owning property jointly, but having no wills, were involved in serious accidents. One spouse died instantly. The other survived by a few hours or days. The survivor could not make out a will. By law, the property passed to the surviving spouse on the death of the other. On the death of the second spouse, the property typically passed entirely to the second spouse's relatives.

Joint ownership may also produce results contrary to those intended, may save few or no taxes and other expenses, and may even increase taxes dramatically. The effects depend on state laws. But in many states lawyers cannot say for certain what the effects of joint tenancy may be. It may nonetheless be advisable to hold checking accounts and small savings accounts in joint ownership to provide the survivor with ready cash on the death of one joint owner; even if the account is frozen for a time it will normally become available well before the assets of the deceased's estate.

For sentimental or other reasons, a husband and wife usually own the family home jointly. Ownership of other assets should be based on sound legal advice—which also applies to the overall estate plan, including the will.

Joint Ownership—How Much?

No simple rules are available to indicate how much property should be held in joint tenancy. If the federal estate tax is not an important factor, a couple may hold all property jointly. But even if the couple's estate is large enough to be federally taxable, some joint ownership may be appropriate for the reasons noted.

The Economic Recovery Tax Act (ERTA) of 1981 produced some new rules on joint tenancies held by married couples. In particular, the act provided that only one-half of the value of the property held in a taxable joint tenancy is includable in the gross estate of the first spouse to die. This "fractional interest" applies regardless of whether the surviving spouse contributed to the purchase of the property.

As a caveat, joint ownership may actually result in a gift. This occurs where one joint owner has contributed all or a disproportionate share of the cost of purchasing property. If Mrs. Jones, for example, uses her own funds to buy corporate stock in her own and Daughter Joanne's name, and if the ownership is irrevocable, Mrs. Jones has made a gift, for federal tax purposes, to her daughter of one-half the value of the stocks. Her daughter has also gained some control over the stocks.

Different from Community Property

Property owned jointly should not be confused with community property. The latter exists in some western and southwestern states that follow Roman law rather than the English common law where property relationships between husbands and wives are concerned. In common-law states marriage gives husbands and wives certain rights in each other's property that often cannot be changed by a will. This is also true in community property states, but the rights are somewhat different.

In these states one-half the income earned during the marriage by either spouse belongs to the other. All property owned by the couple is presumably community property, of which each owns half. But property owned by either spouse before marriage and kept separate, with the income from such property also kept separate, and property acquired by one spouse individually, without contributions from the other spouse—for example, by gift or inheritance—are the separate properties of each spouse owning it.

In community property states married couples' wills cannot touch the separate property of either spouse or either spouse's share of the community property. But a couple can by contract agree on what is community property and what is the separate property of either. Such contracts take effect when written and signed. They are an essential tool of estate planning in community property states. But they do not obviate the need for a will any more than joint tenancy does.

The nine community property states are Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin. In these states estate planners should be wary of making a person other than the spouse a joint owner of community property. As a rule, half the wife's or husband's share of the community property passes to the surviving spouse and the other half goes to the heirs named in the descedant's will. The surviving spouse may or may not be named as an heir.

Tool 4: Wills

As the fourth and most important tool used in estate planning, wills need always to be individualized to the creator's (or testator's) situation, estate, and desires. The written will is signed by the testator in the presence of witnesses; it operates at his or her death to distribute property according to specifications in the document itself. The law imposes certain obligations, including the primary duty to pay tax liabilities, debts, funeral expenses, and the costs of administration. The law also provides for a surviving spouse's legal rights in a decedent's estate and refuses to recognize, on public policy grounds, provisions discouraging marriage, wasting assets, or tying up wealth for unreasonable periods of time.

Wills may be short and simple or long and complex. But in all cases certain essential requirements must be met. The will must, for example, be signed and witnessed to be valid. For his or her own peace of mind, a testator should have a lawyer prepare the "last will and testament." "Do-it-yourself" wills, and wills written on standard forms, are generally inadvisable, largely because so many of them lead to legal problems later.

Advantages

A will allows you to dispose of your property to the persons you select, at the time you choose, in the amounts and proportions you specify. You can also indicate how your property will be protected and who will be responsible for its protection. Anyone who is 21 years of age and mentally capable of understanding the nature of a will can have one drawn up. In some states or under some conditions the age requirement is reduced or waived.

The cases of husbands and wives who sustained fatal injuries in a common disaster point up the importance of wills. Usually, the husband and wife have left their estates to each other. The deaths of both in the same accident could create difficulty, especially where the order in which the two died cannot be determined. For that reason most wills contain a common diasaster clause providing for the distribution of family assets in the event of simultaneous deaths or deaths resulting from the same accident.

Selecting an Executor

Selecting the person who will oversee the distribution of your estate according to your will is as important as choosing a trustee. Many of the same principles apply. The loyalty and ability of the executor may be the single most critical factor in ensuring effective and fair administration of your assets after your death: particularly in preventing losses and protecting the property you have left under your will.

Subject to the supervision of an appropriate court, the executor takes possession of the assets specified in the will, manages the estate as the deceased would have, pays debts, taxes, and expenses, retains legal counsel as required, and through counsel handles all the legal obligations and procedures incident to the "execution" of the will. The executor also accounts to the court and heirs for his or her stewardship and distributes the estate's assets according to the provisions of the will and applicable legal strictures. Business skill and judgment, diligence, and the capacity to attend to details and maintain proper records are essential qualities of the good executor.

As a testator, you can nominate the executor of your choice, and can also name alternates if desired. Often a testator appoints a surviving widow or trusted friend or relative. Testators often name their legal counsel as executor or co-executor. At your discretion as testator, you can name a corporate executor or trustee—usually the trust department of a bank. Such a selection means that your executor will have complete institutional facilities available, will enjoy permanence and freedom from personal and business distractions, and will be able to call on the staff and professional skills necessary to do the work properly. The widow, a relative, or a lawyer may be named coexecutor as a means of combining the close personal relationship of a trusted individual with the skills and facilities of the corporate executor.

Obviously, where a will establishes a trust, the bank trust officer or some equally qualified person is a logical choice as executor/trustee. The executor or trustee must be compensated for his or her services—except in the case of a relative or friend who serves out of a sense of duty or because he or she is a principal heir. Executors' fees are based on the size of the estate, but typically range from 1 or 1.5 percent to about 2.5 percent of the gross estate.

Preparation and Execution

Some statutory formalities govern the preparation of all wills. For example, as noted, wills must be in writing, must demonstrate the testator's intent to pass property to heirs, and may as a rule incorporate another document or other documents if the other documents exist when the will is drawn and if the will adequately identifies the additions. The only exceptions to the rule that wills must be written are nuncupative, or oral, wills. All wills have also to be signed, or given some visible mark intended as a signature—at the end of the will in some states and in other places in other jurisdictions.

Most states require that two witnesses attest to, or witness, the will's signature; some others require three witnesses. Where statutes require it, wills have to be published, with the testator stating that the will is his or her own. Witnesses generally sign in the presence of the testator and each other. No witness should be a beneficiary under the will. An attestation clause appearing before the witnesses' signatures states that all formalities have been complied with, but is not mandatory; the clause merely serves as evidence of proper execution.

Alteration, Revocation

A will can be either changed or revoked. But alteration or revocation has to take place before the death of the testator. The latter must sign any amendment, or cod-icil, in the presence of witnesses—exactly as when the original was executed.

Revocation may take place in a number of ways. Marking with intent to revoke, tearing up, or burning, or otherwise destroying a will effects revocation; so may the operation of law in given cases, or the testator's preparation and execution of a new will containing a specific clause of revocation or provisions that nullify or clash with provisions in an earlier document. Legal invalidation of a will may take place when a testator remarries, obtains a divorce along with agreement to a property settlement, or becomes a parent. State laws generally govern such invalidations.

Depending on the jurisdiction, destruction or revocation of a later will may revive an earlier one. But some states recognize revival only through republication—unless the intent appears otherwise.

Instructions and Disposition

A letter of instructions may provide a lawyer or executor with essential information and simplify the task of carrying out a testator's desires. Such a letter is not part of the will, and need not comply with any formal requirements. Its purpose is to furnish a detailed inventory of the estate's assets, give instructions regarding the locations of all needed documents—including birth, marriage, and military discharge records; social security card; insurance policies; a list of bank accounts and safe deposit boxes; title deeds; pension papers; and so on—and summarize instructions regarding liquidation of business affairs.

Other portions of the letter may indicate where the will is kept, detail funeral instructions, and state the testator's wishes concerning investment of the proceeds of the estate, the education of children or grandchildren, future plans for the widow or widower, and similar subjects. The will becomes a public record; the letter remains private, and can thus express hopes or suggestions on very private, personal matters.

Where to keep the will? The safe deposit box is the most appropriate place if it can be opened without undue delay after the testator's death. Alternatively, the will may be delivered to the executor or to the testator's lawyer, or kept in a safe place with personal papers at home. In no event should it be accessible to a "disappointed heir."

Intestacy

The person who dies intestate—without having made out a will—already has a kind of will: state laws governing intestacy. These laws comprise a "standard" will reflecting the legislature's conception of the deceased's probable objectives. Under intestacy laws, property left by a decedent passes to survivors according to rules fixed by the deceased's state of residence.

Such rules never operate as would an individual will made out according to a person's wishes. The rules frequently lead to serious shrinkage of the estate—and often to a distribution of assets quite different from what the deceased probably wanted. If the estate is large, long and costly litigation may follow the person's death. If the estate is small, it may be divided among various survivors in portions too small to help anyone. If the deceased leaves minor children, they will inherit part of the estate along with his widow.

The laws of intestacy provide in other ways for minor children. A guardian is usually appointed for the children, a process that involves expensive and time-consuming court proceedings. The guardian has to post a bond, renewable annually at a substantial premium. The guardian is supervised by the court and must account to it annually, resulting in more expense and loss of time. All of these procedures are designed to protect the children—and none takes into consideration the fact that the guardian may be the children's mother and the deceased's widow.

Intestacy laws have other effects. They make it impossible for all assets to go to the widow if there are children too. Nor do the laws consider the needs of the deceased's parents if a widow or child survives. Children are treated equally even though their needs may be quite unequal. Under the laws, faithful, loving spouses and mere legal mates are treated exactly alike; so are helpless widows and surviving spouses who are capable in business affairs.

In brief, the time and expense involved in making out a will is infinitesimal in comparison with the problems that may come with intestacy. The "will you already have" is always inferior to the will you ought to have—even though the laws represent the state's best efforts to protect and provide for survivors.

Common Provisions

Intestacy laws work in parallel ways in specific situations. For example, where a husband leaves a widow but no children or parents, the widow inherits the entire estate—after deductions for various expenses that a proper will could have avoided. Where only the decedent's parents survive, the parents usually receive the whole estate—though in some states brothers and sisters also receive shares. As indicated, where a deceased leaves as survivors both wife and parents, the wife usually receives everything even if she is financially independent and the parents are aged and destitute. In a few states, however, the parents receive up to half of their son's estate regardless of the widow's needs.

If the wife and one child survive, each, usually, takes half the estate—but in some jurisdictions the child may take two-thirds or even virtually the entire estate under certain circumstances. Where the wife and two or more children survive, one-third of the estate generally goes to the wife and the remaining two-thirds are divided equally among the children.

The various state laws may, obviously, work great hardship or injustice. Further, the laws are subject to change without notification. A will, by contrast, can be changed only by the person making it out or under the circumstances already noted. A will should be reviewed from time to time, for example when a testator moves to another state; but the will remains the best available means of disposing of property after death.

What Law Governs?

The laws of the testator's state of legal residence determine the validity (or nonvalidity) of a will where personal property is involved. But because each state reserves the right to fix title to land situated within its boundaries, the law of the state where real property is located governs the validity and effect of the will respect to real estate.

All of this may affect the estate plan. A sound plan may call for avoidance of unnecessary ownership of real estate in states where the testator is a nonresident, particularly if there is any possibility that two or more states may claim a descedant as a resident and try to tax the entire estate rather than just the local real property. Most states, and indeed most countries of the world, cooperate with one another by recognizing as valid a will that is valid in the jurisdiction in which the will was made, the jurisdiction in which the testator was a resident, or—as regards real estate—the jurisdiction in which the property is located.

The extent of this cooperation may vary in given situations. The protocols governing such cooperation may, also, change. Thus it is desirable that the will be consistent with the requirements of the state of residence. Some unusual types of wills are recognized in only a few states; but a proper will drawn by legal counsel will be prepared in such a way as to meet the requirements of most if not all states.

Where To Write for Vital Records

Introduction

An official certificate of every birth, death, marriage, and divorce should be on file in the locality where the event occurred. The federal government does not maintain files or indexes of these records. These records are filed permanently either in a state vital statistics office or in a city, county, or other local office.

To obtain a certified copy of any of the certificates, write or go to the vital statistics office in the state or area where the event occurred. Addresses and fees are given for each event in the state or area concerned.

To ensure that you receive an accurate record for your request and that your request be filled with all due speed, please follow the steps outlined below for the event in which you are interested:

- Write to the appropriate office to have your request filled.
- For all certificates send a money order or certified check because the office cannot refund cash lost in transit. All fees are subject to change.
- Type or print all names and addresses in the letter.

Where To Write for Birth and Death Records of U.S. Citizens Who Were Born or Died Outside of the United States and Birth Certifications For Alien Children Adopted by U.S. Citizens

Birth Records of Persons Born in Foreign Countries Who Are U.S. Citizens at Birth

Births of U.S. citizens in foreign countries should be reported to the nearest American consular office as soon after the birth as possible on the Consular Report of Birth (Form FS-240). This report should be prepared and filed by one of the parents. However, the physician or midwife attending the birth or any other person having knowledge of the facts can prepare the report.

Documentary evidence is required to establish citizenship. Consular offices provide complete information on what evidence is needed. The Consular Report of Birth is a sworn statement of facts of birth. When approved, it establishes in documentary form the child's acquisition of U.S. citizenship. It has the same value as proof of citizenship as the Certificate of Citizenship issued by the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Filing a Consular Report of Birth is not authorized for children 5 years of age or older.

A $13.00 fee is charged for reporting the birth. The original document is filed in the Passport Services, Correspondence Branch, U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C. 20524. The parents are given a certified copy of the Consular Report of Birth (Form FS-240) and a short form, Certification of Birth (Form DS-1350 or Form FS-545).

To obtain a copy of a report of the birth in a foreign country of a U.S. citizen, write to Passport Services, Correspondence Branch, U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C. 20524. State the full name of the child at birth, date of birth, place of birth, and names of parents. Also include any information about the U.S. passport on which the child's name was first included. Sign the request and state the relationship to the person whose record is being requested and the reason for the request.

The fee for each copy is $4.00. Enclose a check or money order made payable to the U.S. Department of State.

The Department of State issues two types of copies from the Consular Report of Birth (Form FS-240):

- A full copy of Form FS-240 as it was filed.

- A short form, Certification of Birth (Form DS-1350), which shows only the name and sex of child and the date and place of birth.

The information in both forms is valid. The Certification of Birth may be obtained in a name subsequently acquired by adoption or legitimation after proof is submitted to establish that such an action legally took place.

Birth Records of Alien Children Adopted by U.S. Citizens

Birth certifications for alien children adopted by U.S. citizens and lawfully admitted to the United States may be obtained from the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, D.C. 20536, if the birth information is on file.

Certification may be issued for children under 21 years of age who were born in a foreign country. Requests must be submitted on INS Form G-641, which can be obtained from any INS office. (Address can be found in a telephone directory.) For Certification of Birth Data (INS Form G-350), a $5.00 search fee, paid by check or money order, should accompany INS Form G-641.

Certification can be issued in the new name of an adopted or legitimated child after proof of an adoption or legitimation is submitted to INS. Because it may be issued for a child who has not yet become a U.S. citizen, this certification (Form G-350) is not proof of U.S. nationality.

Certificate of Citizenship

U.S. citizens who were born abroad and later naturalized or who were born in a foreign country to a U.S. citizen (parent or parents) may apply for a certificate of citizenship pursuant to the provisions of Section 341 of the Immigration and Nationality Act. Application can be made for this document in the United States at the nearest office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). The INS will issue a certificate of citizenship for the person if proof of citizenship is submitted and the person is within the United States. The decision whether to apply for a certificate of citizenship is optional; its possession is not mandatory.

Death Records of U.S. Citizens Who Die in Foreign Countries

The death of a U.S. citizen in a foreign country is normally reported to the nearest U.S. consular office. The consul prepares the official "Report of the Death of an American Citizen Abroad" (form OF-180), and a copy of the Report of Death is filed permanently in the U.S. Department of State (see exception below).

To obtain a copy of a report, write to Passport Services, Correspondence Branch, U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C. 20524. The fee for a copy is $4.00.

Exception:

Reports of deaths of members of the Armed Forces of the United States are made only to the branch of the service to which the person was attached at the time of death—Army, Navy, Air Force, or Coast Guard. In these cases, requests for copies of records should be directed as follows.

For members of the Army, Navy, or Air Force:

Secretary of Defense
Washington, D.C. 20301

For members of the Coast Guard:

Commandant, P.S.
U.S. Coast Guard
Washington, D.C. 20226

Records of Births and Deaths Occurring on Vessels or Aircraft on the High Seas

When a birth or death occurs on the high seas, whether in an aircraft or on a vessel, the determination of where the record is filed is decided by the direction in which the vessel or aircraft was headed at the time the event occurred.

a. If the vessel or aircraft was outbound or docked or landed at a foreign port, requests for copies of the record should be made to the U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C. 20520.

b. If the vessel or aircraft was inbound and the first port of entry was in the United States, write to the registration authority in the city where the vessel or aircraft docked or landed in the United States.

c. If the vessel was of U.S. registry, contact the U.S. Coast Guard facility at the port of entry.

Records Maintained by Foreign Countries

Most, but not all, foreign countries record births and deaths. It is not feasible to list all foreign vital records offices, the charges they make for copies of records, or the information they may require to locate a record. However, most foreign countries will provide certifications of births and deaths occurring within their boundaries.

U.S. citizens who need a copy of a foreign birth or death record may obtain assistance by writing to the Office of Overseas Citizens Services, U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C. 20520.

Aliens residing in the United States who seek records of these events should contact their nearest consular office.

Glossary of Computer Terms

Absolute address Usually associated with memory locations, absolute address means the address by which the machine will select a specific location in memory without further address modification. It is the final numeric address of a memory location as opposed to a symbolic name or a number that requires change before it is used to select a memory location.

Absolute value The value of a number without regard to its sign.

Access time Applies to storage devices, and means the interval between a request for access to a specific storage location and availability of the contents of that location.

Accumulator A central register in the arithmetic unit, usually holding one of the operands involved in arithmetic and holding the results when arithmetic is completed. The register whose contents the computer usually operates on and to which most arithmetic-class instructions apply.

Acknowledgment Any signal or message that indicates the receipt of data or commands. Usually associated with data communications where it means that the message just sent was received correctly.

Adder The portion of the arithmetic unit where the addition of binary numbers takes place, but adders also perform the logical operations as well.

Address modification Any process by which the address specified in an instruction is changed before being applied to memory. Addition of the contents of an index register to a base address specified by an instruction is an example of address modification.

Address register A register that holds a memory address before the address is forwarded to memory.

Application program The program that applies the computer to a specific task for which the computer is intended. A program that causes a computer to print bank statements is an application program, but a program that detects and isolates computer faults is not.

Arithmetic unit The core of the computer where most arithmetic operations, logical operations, and testing of results are done.

Array Applied to memories, array means the overall organization of memory. It might be said that a memory is an 8-bit-by-4096-location array. In general, however, array means a group of items organized into a pattern.

Assembler program The program that translates statements made in a symbolic language by a programmer into the machine-language program that the computer executes.

Asynchronous Applied to two units of the computer, asynchronous means that each is operating at its own rate and that their operations are not synchronized. An IO controller, for example, can operate asynchronously with respect to the control unit except to notify each other when certain operations are required. In data communications, asychronous operation means that the sending and receiving units do not maintain common timing. Characters are sent between units complete with information necessary to start and stop the receiving unit.

Backspace Associated with magnetic tape units, backspace means to back up one record and stop.

Backup copy A second copy of the same data in case the primary copy is destroyed. For example, important information stored on disks for daily operation may also be stored on magnetic tapes, but the tapes would be copied onto the disks only if the original information was lost.

Baud A rate of information transfer over communication lines, roughly equivalent to bits per second but with minor differences. Expressed as 1600 baud, 4800 baud, etc. Derived from *Baud*ot code.

Baudot code A standard teletypewriter code named after the French postal telegraph engineer. Five information bits make up each character.

BCD (binary coded decimal) An arrangement in which a certain number of bits are intended to be read as a group representing a single decimal digit. Most often four bits are used to represent the decimal digit.

Bi-stable Any electronic component having only two stable states but most often called a flip-flop or latch and having states called set and reset.

Bit The contraction of the words "binary digit," but is also used to mean the position that holds a binary digit, such as bit 5, which means bit position 5.

Block Data or storage locations handled as a group.

Bootstrap Derived from the saying "to pull himself up by his bootstraps," in computers this usually means a short program capable of loading a large program into memory in response to the operator pushing a "load" switch. Such a program is called a bootstrap loader.

Branch Instructions in a computer program are performed in sequential order unless a branch instruction causes a departure from this sequence. Equivalent to a branch leaving the trunk of a tree.

Buffer Most commonly used to mean a temporary storage area for data being moved between two locations. May mean a single register or a group of many registers.

Byte A group of eight bits handled as a unit is the generally accepted meaning of byte, but some also call smaller groups bytes.

Calling To select a program for execution by stating its name or symbol. The program size varies from a subroutine to a very large program.

Capstan The small cylindrical device or shaft that spins and moves the tape in a magnetic-tape unit. The capstan actually touches the tape to move it, and the supply and take-up reels move only after the capstan has moved the tape out of the storage loops.

Carry The digit that exceeds the capacity of a bit position and thus must be combined in the next higher order bit position. When the sum of the quantities in one bit position exceeds "1" in binary arithmetic, a carry of "1" must be inserted into the bit position to the left.

Character A character is one of the set of symbols handled by the computer. Each letter of the alphabet may be included in the character set, as are numerals, punctuation, and special symbols. There are also control characters included in many character sets; these cause actions and are not shown on display screens and printers. Each character in the character set is represented by a unique binary code.

Check digit A digit produced for the purposes of verifying correct storage and transfer of the number to which it is attached. A parity bit is a check digit. There are several methods of arriving at a check digit but all are based upon determining the contents of the number or numbers to which the check digit is attached and assigning the value of the check digit so that it has a fixed relationship to the contents.

Check sum An expansion of the check-digit scheme, check sum is the sum of all data handled as a block, without regard to overflow. The check sum is attached to the data block when it is stored or transferred.

Clock An electronic timing circuit in a computer. A "clock" produces signals on which all computer operations are based.

Codes Within a computer, a set of binary digits organized so as to represent higher-level functions or symbols; 101111 might always be used to represent an "A," for example, and 00111010 might be the operation code for an ADD instruction.

Compiler Similar to an assembler program listed earlier, a compiler program also translates statements made by a programmer into machine language. However, a compiler is usually more powerful than an assembler in that the assembler translates on a one-for-one basis, one programmer statement for one machine instruction, but a compiler is capable of translating one programmer statement into several machine instructions. In other words, the compiler can expand the input while an assembler cannot.

Complements Simply, the complement of a number is the value which when added to the number will produce the highest symbol that can be held in each positon in the numbering system used. The complement of 44 in the decimal system is 55, resulting in 99, the highest symbols in the numbering system. In the binary system, the complement of 010 is 101, resulting in 111, the highest symbols that can be represented in this system.

Conditional jump instructions Instuctions that test for the presence of a certain condition in the computer and, upon finding it, jump to an instruction not in sequential order rather than performing the following instruction.

Control unit One of the basic units in all general-purpose computers, the control unit decodes instructions and causes them to be carried out.

Control word Usually a supplement to an instruction, a control word holds information that a unit needs to further define the operation required. A control word may also be appended to blocks of data to give important information regarding the content and handling of the data.

Conversational mode A computer operating so as to accept English or "near English" statements directly from the user, normally from a keyboard/display unit, and to provide an immediate response that has meaning to the user without translation.

Core memory Nearly obsolete as of this writing, core memory was once the primary storage device used within a computer. Tiny circles of magnetic material, organized into large arrays, each provided storage for one bit of information. When the circle, or "core," was magnetized in one direction, it held a "1," and when magnetized in the other direction, it held a "0." Core memory was so dominant that the word "core" is still often used to mean memory, although most memories are now banks of integrated circuits.

Counter (1) A computer curcuit that maintains a sequential binary count, such as the instruction address count. (2) Any temporary storage location in which a program is maintaining a count.

CRT (cathode ray tube) The display device used in most display screens. A vacuum tube that uses an electron beam to excite an interal coating that glows. A TV picture tube is a CRT.

Cursor A special indicator placed on a display screen to point out the character or position that is the subject of attention. If the display screen and keyboard are being used by the operator to enter information, the cursor points out the next entry position.

Cyclic redundacy check A checking scheme in which all the data being considered as a block are processed by a complex mathematical equation and one or two check characters formed as a result. The check characters are then attached to the data block when it is stored or transferred. The receiving unit or the unit retrieving the data block performs the same mathematical operation on the data block and compares its CRC characters with those received to check the accuracy of transmission or storage.

Data base Usually a large collection of information maintained permanently, or semipermanently, on which a computer is to operate. Examples of a data base are the payroll records of a company and a list of all the parts maintained in its inventory.

Data link A communications link over which computer data are transferred. This may range from voice-grade telephone lines that handle data transfer at low rates to radio links capable of very high rates of transfer.

Debug To remove the "bugs" from equipment or programs during the initial testing of these products. A "bug" is usually thought of as a design flaw that prevents the equipment or program from fulfilling its intended function rather than a malfunction that occurs after the system has been tested.

Decision instruction An instruction whose action depends upon the conditions it finds existing when it is executed. A Branch on 0 instruction, for example, will branch if it finds that the accumulator contents are 0 but will not branch if they are not 0.

Decrement (1) To reduce a quantity by a specific number, or (2) the number by which the quantity is reduced. When a 1 is subtracted from the contents of an index register, that register is said to have been decremented by 1.

Diagnostic program A program intended to test computer equipment and, through a logical process of testing and elimination, isolate failures to small sections of the machine.

Digital A computer in which all quantities are represented by discrete numbers rather than variations in voltage or current level. A computer that uses voltage and current levels to represent quantities in an analog computer.

Disk memory The storage area maintained on magnetic disk units.

Double precision A scheme in which the results of an arithmetic operation have twice the number of positions of the individual quantities involved so as to be more precise.

Down counter A computer circuit that is originally set to a number and then counts toward zero. A program may also establish memory location as a counter and reduce its contents, producing a down counter.

Drum memory The storage area maintained on magnetic drum units.

Dump Usually means the copying of memory contents to another storage medium or displaying or printing them for examination. Dump implies the lack of discrimination among the data transferred. In other words, copying is not selective.

Encoder a device or program that converts one form of information to another. For example, an encoder would convert an "A" to the binary representation to an "A," while a decoder would translate the binary representation and produce an "A.".

End-around-carry A carry from the most significant position of the adder that is brought back to the least significant position and added in when subtraction is done with the subrahend represented in one's complement form. Use of the 2's complement form does not eliminate the end-around-carry but allows it to be discarded rather than added in the least significant adder stage.

End of file A special mark recorded in storage media that designates the end of a group of records that is to be considered a file.

Excess 3 code A code in which the decimal value of the binary representation of a deciaml digit is three greater than the digit itself. For example, the digit 0 is represented by binary 011, read "3" in decimal, but when 011 is translated it produces a 0 on the printer and display screen.

Executable Applied to programs, executable means a program that can be performed by the computer rather than a source program that must be assembled or compiled before it can be executed. An executable program is usually called an "object" program.

Executive The name usually given to a program whose function is to control the jobs to be performed and to select the programs required to perform them. An executive would also manage the storage media as required to provide input data and to store processed data.

File A group of records organized so as to be treated as a unit. All the records in a file hold information that is of the same general type.

Fixed-point arithmetic The arithmetic operations performed in a computer in which the position of the binary point is established by the computer design and is not subject to change.

Floating-point arithmetic The arithmetic operations performed in a computer in which the position of the binary point in a number is specified by a point position indicator section attached to each number.

Flow chart A method by which certain symbols are used to show the functions that a program is to perform and the order in which these functions are to be performed. Decisions to be made, inputs required, outputs produced, and actions to be taken are among the functions shown in program flow charts.

Full adder A complete adder capable of handling a carry-in to each stage, forming the sum of two numbers, and producing a carry-out of each stage. See "adder" earlier, and "half adder" following.

Half adder The portion of an adder that handles only the two numbers being added and produces a sum and carry-out. A half adder does not handle a carry-in.

Header Identifying or labeling information that precedes the date.

Hexadecimal numbering system A system in which four binary digits are read as a decimal digit, 0 through 9, and six letters, usually A through F. Counting progresses 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, A, B, C, D, E, F. A total of sixteen combinations are used; therefore the name hexadecimal is given to this system.

Hollerith code A code used in punched cards in which one column of twelve positions each is read as a unit. The combinations of punches in these twelve positions is Hollerith code. Named for Dr. Herman Hollerith.

Increment (1) To increase a quantity by a specific number, or (2) the number by which the quantity is increased. When a 1 is added to the contents of an index register, for example, that register is said to have been incremented by 1.

Index register A register, usually in the arithmetic unit, that holds a count. The most common use of this count is to modify memory addresses so that the same operations can be performed repeatedly but with a different memory address each time.

Indexing Generally means the modification of a memory address by the contents of an index register. Can also mean a system of electronic record-keeping in which an index of the contents of a file is maintained.

Indirect addressing Normally, the address portion of an instruction is the address of the data to be operated on. However, indirect addressing is a method by which the address portion of an instruction directs the control unit to a memory location in which the address of the data to be opearated on is held. In other words: "Go to this address to get your final address."

Instruction register Always part of the control unit, the instruction register holds each instruction after it is read from memory and while it is being decoded and executed.

Instruction word This means an instruction consisting of an operation code, specifying what is to be done, and an operand, which is a quantity to be used in the execution of the instruction.

Integrated circuit Circuits formed so that their components cannot be separated. Usually called "chips" because they are very small and are composed of materials such as silicon.

Interrupt A signal used by other computer units to gain the attention of the control unit. Usually produced in response to important external conditions, an interrupt signal produces a break in the flow of activities. Action taken in response to the interrupt varies according to the programs being executed, but the immediate needs of the external device are normally met before the control unit returns to the point at which it was interruped.

Keypunch (1) The equipment used to translate data into coded form acceptable to a computer or (2) the action of operating the equipment to accomplish the translation. Older systems used equipment that actually punched the data into cards as an operator read the data from input sheets and typed the data at a keyboard. However, modern systems convert the keyboard input directly to electronic form.

Lateral parity Usually means the individual parity bit assigned to a single byte or character.

Logic diagram The method of representing the circuits that make up a computer by symbols that illustrate the function of each circuit.

Longitudinal parity A parity character formed at the end of a block of data. Each bit in the parity character represents the total parity of all preceding bits of the same level. For example, bit 1 of the parity character is the parity bit for bit 1 of all preceding characters.

Longitudinal redundancy check character (LRCC) Usually associated with magnetic-tape units, LRCC means the longitudinal parity characters recorded at the end of a block a data, normally at the end of a file.

Loops Applies to programs, and means a group of instructions that return to the starting point and repeat themselves, usually until a certain event takes place to break the loop.

Machine code The binary numbers used within the computer to represent instructions, addresses, numbers, and other characters. Most often, however, machine code is more narrowly defined to mean the binary representation of the operation code portion of an instruction.

Macro instruction (1) A source statement that causes at least several instructions to be generated. (2) A "large" instruction that may call for routines or programs to be executed.

Matrix An array of elements in a rectangle, such as the printing pattern of a matrix printer. Also an array of numbers.

Memory The storage device immediately accessible to the control and arithmetic units of a computer, where the current instructions and operating data are stored.

Memory-address register The register, usually in the memory unit, that holds the address applied to the memory array.

Memory cycle The functions performed by a memory unit in response to a read or a write command.

Micro operations Most often used to mean the individual steps necessary to carry out an instruction. Sometimes associated with micro programming, which means to select the steps and processes to be performed within an instruction.

Microsecond One one-millionth of a second.

Millisecond One one-thousandth of a second.

MODEM An abbreviation for *Mod*ulator-*Dem*odulator, a device used to convert data from a computer to a form suitable for transmission and back again to computer form. A MODEM, for example, is used at both ends of a voice-grade telephone line when two computers are exchanging data over that line.

Multiple address Applies to a computer whose instruction word holds more than one address section. Such a computer is called a multiple-address machine, as opposed to a single-address machine.

Multiplex To place information from several different sources on a single channel, usually separating them by choosing one source at a time for connection to the channel.

Nanosecond One one-billionth of a second.

Nondestructive readout The process by which data can be read from a storage device without affecting the stored information. This term is usually applied to memory units rather than other storage devices because older memories destroyed the contents of each location read and required that they be restored.

Nonexecutable Applied to statements entered by a programmer, this means that that statement is not converted to a machine instruction and executed. An example of a nonexecutable statement is "enter remarks."

Nonreturn-to-zero recording In magnetic recording devices, the practice of not returning the magnetic field to zero at the end of a bit position.

Object program A program that is in machine language and is executed by the computer. It is the "object" of entering and assembling source statements and represents the final results of the process.

Off-line operations An operation that is not in the primary flow of computer activities. For example, data from a magnetic tape may be printed out while a computer is not engaged in or available for its primary task. In this case, the computer is doing off-line printing. Can also mean an operation such as a direct connection between the tape and printer, which bypasses the computer completely and is not under computer control. A peripheral unit that is said to be off line is one that is not immediately accessible to the computer.

On-line operation The opposite of the off-line operation above, an on-line operation is in the primary flow of the computer activities. When applied to the status of a peripheral unit, it means that that unit is immediately accessible to the computer.

Operand Usually considered to be one of two major parts of an instruction, the operation code being the other. An operand is an item to be operated upon or is somehow involved in the operation specified by the operation code. An operand may be a memory address, a number to be added, a parameter of some type, etc.

Operation code A portion of an instruction or control word that specifies the function that the computer is to perform. Eventually translated into binary-form machine language, the operation code may be any one of several high-level forms, including a symbolic form, when entered by the programmer.

Overflow The condition resulting from an operation in which the result exceeds the capacity of the computer's basic unit of information to represent it. A decimal 15 could be represented by four bit positons, for example, but if the results of an addition were 16, an overflow would have occurred and the result is meaningless because it has exceeded the capacity of the basic unit of information.

Parallel The organization of a unit so that all parts of an element are available at the same time. Usually used to describe the way in which bytes and words are available and operated on. When all eight bits of a byte are made available simultaneously, that is said to be parallel; if they are available only one at a time, that is said to be serial. The word "parallel" also applies to high-level operations, but always has the same basic meaning: simultaneous availability or operation.

Parity checking As defined in the dictionary, "parity" has to do with maintaining equality. Applied to computer use, it means adding a bit to a unit of information so as to maintain the total number of 1s in that unit always odd or always even, depending upon which method is chosen. The bit added is called the parity bit, and it is a way of checking the accuracy of storage or transfer.

Polling A scheme in which a central unit chooses one remote unit after another and exchanges data with each remote unit that has information ready. Usually associated with a central computer and many remote terminals.

Positional notation The assignment of different weights to the positions that a digit in any numbering system occupies, such as the units, tens, and hundreds positions in the decimal system. The weight of a specific character depends upon the position that it occupies. Contrast this with the confusing positions used by the Roman numeral system.

Program (1) A collection of computer instructions arranged so as to cause the computer to perform a specific task. (2) The act of selecting and placing in the proper order the instructions required.

Protocol Most often associated with the exchange of data between two systems separated by considerable distance, protocol means the rules and conventions that will be followed by each system during the exchange.

Pseudo instruction An instruction issued as a source statement by the programmer but that is not executed by the computer directly on a one-machine instruction for one psuedo-instruction basis. An example of a pseudo instruction might be "title the page, TTP," which would be converted to many machine instructions in order to carry out that act.

Queue Usually a number of inputs placed in order to be processed in sequence, but can also apply to a number of units awaiting output. The first group would be called the "input queue" and the latter the "output queue." It should be noted that the elements placed in a queue are usually large—messages between computer sites, for example—rather than just a few bytes to be processed one after another.

Radix The quantity of characters in a numbering system. The radix of the binary system is 2; two characters, 1 and 0, make up the system. The radix of the decimal system is 10, the ten characters being 0 through 9.

Random access The ability to gain access to any one storage location among many in an equal amount of time and effort and not depending upon any previous action. Tape units, for example, are serial access rather than random access. Usually only the memory within the computer is thought of as being a random-access storage unit.

Reading The retrieval of information from some form of storage.

Read-only memory A storage unit whose contents cannot be changed during normal operation. In other words, data cannot be written into this memory by the computer; it was placed there in advance by a special means, and the computer can only read the memory contents. Read-only memories have the advantage of being very small and requiring a minimum of supporting circuits.

Read/write head A small unit capable of both producing and sensing magnetic fields. Used to record and play back information on magnetic tapes, disks, drums, and any other magnetic recording device.

Real-time processing The processing of data from an event when the event is actually occurring rather than storing the data for processing later. An example of realtime processing would be a machine tool being operated by a computer in which the progress of the tool was sensed by the computer, and directions given by the computer were based on the tool's progress.

Record A group of bytes, characters, or words organized and handled as a unit is the narrow definition of "record" used in the computer industry. "Record" is usually applied to the organization of data on magnetic tapes and disks.

Register A group of bi-stable devices used to hold a unit of information handled by a computer. Most often associated with the groups of bi-stables in the control, arithmetic, and input-output units, but the locations in storage (particularly memory) are called registers by some.

"Scratch pad" storage A very small memory maintained in the arithmetic or control units for the purpose of temporarily storing certain information without using the main memory. This information may be the interim results of calculations or the information required to return from an interrupt.

Serial The organization of a unit so that only one part of an element is available at a time. (See Parallel.) Used to describe the way in which data are transferred or processed, such as only one bit of a byte being available at a time. To handle or process in sequence rather than simultaneously.

Serial access The ability to reach information in storage only sequentially. Tape units are serial-access storage units in that the tape must be moved past the read/write head until the desired location is reached.

Shift register A register in which the information can be moved laterally—that is, the register contents can be shifted so that a bit moves to the adjacent position.

Software Very commonly used to mean programs, while hardware means the equipment, but originally meant the programs, programming aids, and the documentation associated with programs.

Source program The statements originally entered by the programmer before they are assembled or compiled. The program written in the source language that is converted to machine code and the object program by an assembler or compiler.

Subroutine A small group of instructions intended to perform one specific function. Whenever this function is required by a program, the subroutine is called and executed. This allows several different programs to use the same subroutine and avoids the need to include these instructions in every program.

Synchronous Applied to data communications, synchronous means that the sending and receiving units use a common timing signal to remain "in step" while data are being transferred, and the data stream is continuous. When applied to computers it means that the computer units are related by a common timing cycle and that their operations have a fixed timing relationship to one another.

Time-out (1) A specific interval in which an event must occur or the operation is considered in error or ended is called a "time-out." (2) The act of allowing this interval to elapse is called a "time-out."

Time sharing Generally thought of as the sharing of a large central computer by several parties, usually from remote locations, on the basis of having certain intervals assigned to each party. Sometimes the access is based on demand, and in other cases it is based upon time assignments made in advance.

Trace routine A program intended to assist programmers in locating flaws during the program-testing process. A trace routine allows the programmer to execute one instruction at a time in order to examine the results of that instruction, the inputs provided, and the contents of the most significant registers involved. Large-scale computers with elaborate control panels do not require the use of trace routines because the controls and displays available to the programmer enable him to accomplish the same thing. Trace routines are most often used in small computers where the controls and displays available are limited.

Translation The conversion of one form of code to another. For example, source statements are "translated" to machine language by assemblers and compilers, operation codes are translated into commands by decoders in the control units, and a code such as EBCDIC held in storage is translated to ASCII for transmission to another system.

Transparent To "see through" predetermined character assignments and view only the binary representation. An example of this is "transparent mode" of data communications. Until this mode is chosen, the bit patterns are interpreted in a preassigned way, an "END" command might be represented by 10101111, for example, and whenever 10101111 was received the computer would recognize it as the END command. In the transparent mode, the computer receiving 10101111 would simply process it as a number and not interpret it as an END command, thus "seeing through" the preassigned meaning.

User program An application program operated by the computer user.

Volume A large collection of files, usually a large physical division such as a reel of magnetic tape.

Word One of the basic units of information processed by the computer. Most often, a word is considerably larger than a byte. A computer may use a sixteen-bit, thirty-two-bit, or forty-eight-bit word as its basic unit of information.

Writing The process of placing information in a storage medium.

Word Processing Glossary

abbreviation document A document on which words or phrases are stored; each one is identified by a short code or abbreviation and can be called out and inserted into your main document by using that code or abbreviation only, rather than having to re-enter the entire word or phrase. For complicated words that are used often, use of an abbreviation document saves both time and typographical errors.

access To make something available to use; to access a document means to call it out for revision or printing.

application A specific task that your system can perform; you can "apply" the software/hardware parts of your system to achieve a desired result. Copying a document from one disk to another is a concrete application of one of your system's many possibilities.

automatic A function your system will perform repeatedly for you without specific prompting each time. An "automatic sheet feeder" feeds a new sheet of paper for each new page without your having to put the sheet into the system manually; "automatic page numbering" prints the proper page number on each sheet on a large job without your having to enter each page number separately.

automatic sheet feeder An optional piece of hardware that feeds single sheets of paper automatically to the printer. Most automatic sheet feeders have two trays and can feed the first sheet of a document from one tray, with all the rest of the sheets needed for that document being fed from the second tray. This feature permits the use of letterhead for the first page and blank sheets for all the following pages. Every automatic sheet feeder system has a manual feed option, so you can slip in a single job that bypasses the automatic feature.

backspace A key that moves the cursor backward one space at a time; in some systems the use of this key will delete the character the cursor backs over.

back up To move the cursor backward through the document without deleting copy.

backup copy A copy of an entire disk or documents on a disk that is made for safekeeping. Backup copies can also be made of program (systems or software) disks.

batch printing Lining up jobs in a queue (a waiting line) to print automatically one right after another. The creation or revision of other documents that are not in the printing queue can take place while the printing is going on.

bidirectional Pertaining to the ability to move in both directions. Most daisy wheel and thimble printwheels used on letter-quality printers and most matrix printheads move and print in both right-to-left and left-to-right directions. If your system can print superscripts and subscripts, the paper moves bidirectionally—first up and then down or first down and then up—when printing these characters.

block A storage space on a diskette that holds a certain number of characters. Each block holds the same number of characters. Your manufacturer can tell you how many characters are contained in the blocks in your system. Knowing this information is helpful in determining the total size of any document.

boilerplate Standard paragraphs used in your work. They can be filed by name or number and stored in a paragraph document to be called up for inclusion in a document whenever needed.

bold To overprint the same text with the same characters in order to make them appear slightly darker. Not all systems have the capability of printing each character twice.

breaking hyphen A hyphen that joins compound words ("long-standing") and will break if the first half of the compound word is at the end of a line ("long-"; "standing"). Entering a breaking hyphen may require a supershift, depending on the software program in your system.

brightness control The device on your system that allows you to lighten or darken the text that appears on your screen. It is especially useful if you work in a natural light setting in which the room's light varies from strong sunlight to early winter darkness.

carbon ribbon A better-quality printer ribbon. It normally is used only once, with each character striking at an unused spot on the ribbon, in contrast to a cloth ribbon that is used several times in a continuous loop. The carbon ribbon produces a darker, cleaner image.

carriage The mechanism in your printer that holds the printwheel or printhead and moves the printwheel (printhead) back and forth across the paper while printing is taking place. (Sometimes called a "carrier.")

center To position a word or phrase at the center of a line or centered on a tab stop. Once the centering location is determined and the centering commands are executed, the word or phrase will automatically center as it is entered.

character Any letter, number, space, command, or instruction that you enter into the system. You will normally see only the letters, punctuation marks, numbers, and spaces on the screen. If you enter a display or view mode, you will see all the other special characters you have entered that control the format of your document, such as hard returns, superscripts, tab stops, format changes, and so on. These normally invisible characters will not print out, but they do take up space on your disk.

cloth ribbon A printer ribbon that is on a continuous loop and can be reused until you decide it is printing too light to use any longer. A carbon ribbon is used only once and has to be replaced when it has run once through the printer.

code In some systems the supershift key is called "code." It needs to be pressed at the same time (or on some systems, just before) a coded character key is pressed to make the key perform its coded function. For example, the "u" key pressed alone results in a lowercase "u" being entered; shift + "u" results in an uppercase "U" being entered; and supershift (or code) + "u" results in the word last entered being underlined (if underlining a word is the function of the supershift + "u" key in your system).

column Vertically arranged blocks of text, usually found in tables or in newsletters or bulletins. Some systems will adjust the space between the columns automatically; some require you to tab to the space manually. Most systems will center columns around a center point, around a decimal, around a comma, or will print a column flush right or flush left.

communications The transferring of data to and from your word processing system to another computer system (word processor, data processor, intelligent copier, and so on) by cable or telephone. Communications requires special hardware (cable and/or modem) and software.

composite character A character that is produced by two or more characters one on top of the other.

continuous-form paper A long piece of paper that can go continuously through your printer. The paper is perforated at regular intervals so pages can be separated. This paper is pulled through the printer by a form-feed tractor.

copy (1) The content of your document; (2) to duplicate your document or disk on another disk, or to duplicate your document elsewhere on the same disk; (3) the duplicate of your document or disk.

create To start a new document. The first step is to give this new document a name, so you can later go back to it for revision or call it up for printing, or even instruct the system to erase it.

CRT An abbreviation of "cathode ray tube," another name for your screen (sometimes more technically called "video display" or VD).

cursor The indicator that shows where the next character to be entered will enter the system (sometimes a blinking underline or rectangle, sometimes a solid highlight).

cursor keys Some systems have keys with arrows that move the cursor up or down, right or left, depending on which key is pressed. If the key is held down, the cursor will continue to move in a given direction until the key is released. Other systems have keys with names that move the cursor forward or backward by character, by word, by sentence, by paragraph, or by page. Most systems have supershift combinations that enable you to move the cursor directly to a particular page in a long document, or to the start (top) or the end (bottom) of the document. By using "find" or "search" commands, you can move the cursor to particular words in your document.

cut To remove or copy part of a document (sometimes called "move"). In some systems you have to "paste" this part of the document elsewhere in the document; in other systems you have an option of "forgetting it," and thus deleting a sizable portion of the document at once rather than word by word or line by line.

date and time A time clock in the system. It must be set with the current date and time each time the system is turned on. Some systems can print the date and time from the clock onto a document, thus providing an automatic "stamp" as to when work was begun and/or ended. A system with a date and time feature will automatically keep track of the time spent working on each document.

decimal alignment The ability of the system to line up numbers in a column on a decimal point.

default The settings that are preassigned and will format and control the system unless you specifically enter different settings. The software manufacturer initially preassigns these settings, on the basis of the most widespread expected usage. You may enter new settings for a particular document: these will thereafter apply to that document unless you change the settings later. In some systems, you can enter new settings on the program diskette—creating your own default settings to which the system will automatically revert when not specifically told otherwise.

delete To remove (erase) characters, words, pages, documents, or entire disks. Deleted parts of a document normally cannot be retrieved (only if they are placed in the system's temporary memory can they be retrieved).

disk A thin, flexible magnetic disk, enclosed in a rather stiff protective jacket. Depending on your system, it will be 5¼ inches in diameter or 8 inches in diameter. Some newer minisystems are appearing with disks that are 3 inches in diameter. Documents and software programs are stored on disks. The amount of data that can be placed on a disk is not directly related to its diameter, but rather to the density of its formatting. (Often disks are called "diskettes.") disk drives The recording and reading devices that are located on your screen console or in a separate disk drive unit. You place the disks into the slots in the disk drive, close the slot door or gate, and the system will automatically load the contents of the disks into the system for work. (In some systems, you need to instruct the system to load, or "boot," the program disk into the system.

disk name The name you assign a disk. It may be an actual name, an abbreviation, or an alphanumeric code. This name will thereafter be used in the system to gain access to the contents of the disk. You can change a disk name at any time.

display To show the contents of a disk on the screen. In a display mode, the hidden or invisible characters are also shown.

document A body of text of any length that you create, name, and store on a document disk.

document comment Some systems allow you to enter a comment about the document. This comment will serve as a reminder of some work function, deadline, or routing you need to remember. This comment will appear only on your screen: it will not be printed out, nor will it affect the formatting of the document. The document comment is a kind of electronic memo slip you can attach to your document, if you wish.

document name The name you give a document when you create it. That name is the means you have thereafter to gain access to the document for revision, copying, printing, or deletion.

document number Some systems will assign each document on a disk a number. That number does not change as you add or delete other documents on the disk.

double-density disk A disk that is initialized in such a way as to take considerably more data than a single-density disk. The amount varies from nearly double to over three times as much, depending on your system.

draft printer A high-speed matrix printer that prints out documents on continuous-form paper. You can use this printer for initial proofing and revision; its output is not as attractive as the output of a letter-quality printer.

duplicate To copy a document or disk elsewhere, but still leave the original intact.

edit To revise the text of a document.

edit keys The functional keys that allow you to instruct the system directly to perform functions relating to editing. Moving the cursor, going to a page or word, searching or finding, replacing, filing or ending, inserting required page ends, calling up view mode, are all typical functions performed directly by pressing edit keys.

elite Another name for a 12-pitch typeface; a 10-pitch typeface is sometimes called "pica."

end A term used in some systems for filing a document onto the document disk. Some systems require using a page end key to file each page as you proceed through the document, without having to file the entire document and then recall it again to continue work.

enter To put text and instructions into the system by pressing on keys. Some systems use the term "enter" to refer to their execute-an-instruction command.

erase To remove or delete text from a disk, making that space available for receiving new text. A system will normally have several methods of erasing text, ranging from single characters to documents to entire disks.

error message A brief message that may appear on your screen to tell you that you cannot perform a function the way you are trying to perform it. The message will usually prompt you to help you perform the function in a way that works in the system.

execute A command to the system to perform a function. You usually need to set the function up; when you execute the command, the function occurs. Some systems have a special "execute" or "enter" key; others use the return key as the execute key.

feature A function that your system is capable of performing. A spelling-hyphenation dictionary is an example of a feature.

field A distinctly identifiable part of your document that can be recalled and used by reference to its identity. For example, a list of addresses may include the state as a separate identifiable part or field. "State" is the field name, and "Iowa" or "IA" is a part of the field. When the field name is called up for use, the system will use "Iowa" or "IA."

file To store a document on a disk for future use. Also, "file" is another name for the document itself.

file name The name or alphanumeric code you have given the system to identify a particular document.

find A term used in some systems to define the search feature.

footer Text placed automatically at the bottom of each page, such as a document name, page number, date, or author's name.

format The layout of the page, using such specific instructions as margin width, tabs, number of lines, and line spacing.

global search and replace A feature that automatically searches out every instance of a string of characters in a document and replaces them with a different string of characters. You have told the system which word or phrase to search and which word or phrase to use as the replacement. The word "global" indicates this process occurs throughout the entire document without stopping, rather than moving from one instance to the next individually on your command.

go-to A feature that enables you to move quickly to a specific page (by page number) in a document.

hard copy A printout on paper of a document from your system.

hard return A return caused by pressing the return key rather than an automatic return (soft return) created by the system when a line turns over. The hard return will function wherever it appears, even though the document rearranges itself when text is added or deleted.

hard space A space made in combination with a supershift key; this space holds letters together as though it were a character itself. It is useful in ensuring that initials that are part of a person's name do not separate over two different lines.

hardware The physical equipment parts of a word processing system. Printers and keyboards are hardware.

header Text placed automatically at the top of each page, such as a document name, page number, date, or author's name.

highlight A feature that makes some text stand out on the screen. Highlighting may be by underlining, by brighter appearance of certain characters, or by lighting up the background behind characters, words, or blocks of text.

hyphenation Use of the character - at the end of a line to divide a word into syllables or between parts of compound words. Some systems can use a hyphenation dictionary to divide words automatically (though not always correctly). All systems differentiate between a hard hypen, which always appears and holds characters on either side together; a breaking hyphen, which always appears but will allow the characters that follow it to drop down to the next line if a line turnover is required: and an invisible hyphen, which is used in word division and will appear if at the end of a line but will not be printed if the word is elsewhere in the text.

index The list of documents on a document disk. The index can be viewed on the screen and printed out on paper.

initialize To prepare a disk to receive data. The data may be a software program or documents. The preparation may be for single- or double-density use, depending on your needs and the capabilities of your system.

insert To place text into a document between characters that are already in the document. The system will rearrange existing text around the new, inserted text.

justify To print a document with even right and left margins. Some systems have a "half-justify" option that makes the right-hand margin somewhat more even than a regular ragged right but not exactly even as in a justified right-hand margin. The system will require hyphenating when printing a justified right-hand margin, since the lines will spread so open as to be unattractive if there are too few characters on a line.

keyboard The hardware part that has keys for entering characters and commands. It is either part of the terminal or is connected to the terminal by a flexible cable.

keystroke One press of any key on the keyboard, including spaces, returns, and any command keys.

keystroke save A feature on some systems that allows you to put a certain number of characters into a temporary memory and play them back on command for any number of times until you replace them with a new set of characters. On other systems, this feature can be used with the cut-and-paste feature.

left justify A tab stop on which the first character of any entry in a column always lines up; the words or figures build toward the right.

left margin The place where all left-hand lines normally start to print. The placement of your left-hand margin on the paper is related to how you set up your margins when you format the page. You should learn how far in from the edge of the paper your left-hand margin should be for letterhead correspondence and use that setting routinely for correspondence work.

letter-quality printer Often referred to as an LQP. This printer uses an impact printing method with printwheels or thimbles to produce a quality of printing equal to or better than that produced by a good typewriter.

library A feature that enables you to store words, phrases, and even paragraphs elsewhere on a disk (in a library document) and to call them up for reproduction in the document you are working on by using a shorthand code of letters or numbers.

line counter Some systems show you which line you are working on at any given time. They normally count from the top of the page, so you have to calculate the number of top margin lines to figure out how far down the page you are at any line number.

line spacing The spacing between lines of print when your document prints out. Systems vary in their capability of ranging from single-line spacing (normally six lines to an inch) to increments of a single line or triple-line spacing. Half-line spacing or less is useful in printing superscripts and subscripts: if you can control your system to produce less than half-line spacing, your superscripts will not overlap the descenders on the line above when you are printing them in a single-spaced document.

list processing The feature that allows you to combine lists with a form (or shell) document in order to produce an original, personalized document that combines the individual features in the list with the copy in the form document.

load The term used in some systems to describe the function of placing your software program into the system's computer after you have turned the machine on.

lowercase The uncapitalized form of letters. The term is taken from earlier printing times when these letters were manually taken by typesetters one by one from a large compartmentalized drawer (called a "case") in which the uncapitalized letters were stored in the compartments located at the lower two-thirds of the case.

margin The space between any of the four edges of the paper and the place where your printing begins or ends. There are top, right, left, and bottom margins to each job.

math A feature that allows you to enter numbers together with numeric commands (addition, subtraction, multiplication, division, percentage) that will function in your job. Most often this feature is used in list processing and sorting work.

matrix printer A high-speed printer that prints dots instead of entire letters. The dots fit into a matrix, or pattern, to form the general shape of a letter or number. The more dots and the tighter the matrix, the more the matrix-produced letter looks like an impact-produced letter.

menu Choices listed on the screen from which you can select on option. You need to go to the proper menu to select a particular feature you want to make happen. Your manual illustrates all the possible menus you can call up and tells you how to call them up.

merge The act of combining elements from lists with a form document when list processing.

message Information, questions, or warnings that appear on your screen as a result of some condition that calls for a response from you. This condition may be due to the fact that you have asked the machine to do something it cannot do, or do it out of its own sequence, or it may be due to the printer running out of paper or ribbon, or needing a printwheel change.

module A piece of hardware that can be combined with other hardware pieces to form a working computer or word processing unit. Some modules are changeable; for instance, you can use more than one kind of printing module (printer) with a word processor. Or you can use more than one kind of keyboard (for instance, if you have a French-language software program, you could use a French-language keyboard without having to change any other elements in your system except to secure a French-language printwheel).

numeric keyboard Some systems use a special ten-key (0–9) section for numbers, configured in the same style as most calculators. Other systems use the 1–0 sequence of keys on an upper row in the main keyboard section.

operator A person who makes a word processing system function by entering characters and commands.

option Any one of the choices that can be selected by an operator from a menu.

originator A person who writes or dictates a document for word processing by a word processing operator.

overstrike To place a character over another character. If the same character overstrikes a character, the result is a slightly bolder appearance; if a different character overstrikes, the result is a combined character or a character with an accent mark. In legal work, many words are overstruck with a hyphen (as in "~~effective immediately~~") to show words that are proposed to be deleted from a legal document. Many word processing systems are able to actually delete those overstruck words in a revision after both parties have agreed to their deletion and the final document is being prepared.

page A section in a document marked off by a page end mark. This mark may be placed there automatically during pagination or it may be placed there manually. The system registers this area in the document as a page in its numbering system. The page may be full of type, partially full, or even completely empty.

pagination The feature that divides a document into pages. You determine how many lines should be on a page when you enter the automatic pagination instructions, or you do so by entering a required page end mark at the place of your choice.

paper jam Paper has become wedged into the printer or feeder and needs to be manually removed.

paragraph Text of one or more lines that is separated from other text in the document by a paragraph marker (if your system has one and if you use it) or by two hard returns. In some systems, a number of printed paragraphs that you separate by a single hard return followed by a tab indent will be understood by the system's logic to be a single long paragraph if you try to move forward or backward by paragraphs. The system only recognizes the paragraph mark or two hard returns in sequence for its paragraph functioning.

paragraph document Copy—from a single word to an entire paragraph in length—that is stored in an alternate location, that is, not in the document you are working on, but can be inserted into your document either by a couple of manual keystrokes or by including a format command in your shell document.

paste To insert data that has been temporarily stored in a "paste" area or "keystroke save" area. The content of the data in the paste area does not change (and so can be used many times) until new data are stored in that area.

pica An often-used name for 10-pitch characters.

pitch The number of characters per horizontal inch. The pitches normally used in word processing are 10-pitch (sometimes called "pica"), 12-pitch (sometimes called "elite"), and 15-pitch. You need to instruct your system about which pitch you are using and make sure that you have the proper printwheel in the printer for that pitch setting.

platen The cylinder against which the printhead strikes to produce an impression.

printer The hardware unit that produces a paper copy of your document.

printhead The hardware device in the printer that produces matrix characters or that strikes a printwheel to produce impact characters.

printwheel A circular printing element, sometimes called a "daisy wheel" or a "thimble," depending on its shape.

program A software set of instructions that enables your system to perform word processing functions. You load your program into the system each time you turn the system on. Your manual explains how to enter commands into the system to make it perform functions that the program enables it to do. Most word processing programs are "packaged"; that is, they are prepared by the manufacturer and are licensed property. Generally, you are not able to change the content of a word processing program.

prompt A message that appears on your screen and requires a response from you.

proportional spacing Spacing between characters that is somewhat proportional to the amount of space taken up by each character (for instance, in proportional spacing, or PS, an "m" uses more space than an "I"). To use proportional spacing, your system must be able to use a PS print setting and you must have PS printwheels that are compatible with your system.

queue A waiting line. Sometimes you can have a queue of documents to be printed one after the other automatically, while you are editing yet a different document.

ragged right An uneven right-hand margin. Unless you justify a document, it will print out as you see it on the screen.

replace A feature of putting in new characters in the place of previously entered characters that now are deleted.

return Use of the return key ends a line at that point where it is pressed. The return key is also used in many systems to execute commands.

revision The work you do to change the contents of a document or the commands that control its appearance.

ribbon A narrow strip of carbon or cloth used in the printer against which the printwheel or printhead strikes to create an impression on the paper. In word processors, ribbons come in self-contained cartridges. Some ribbons made of cloth are in continuous-loop cartridges and can be used several times over; other ribbons can be used only once.

right justify A tab setting for the rightmost character in a column. All the other characters or numbers in the column will build out toward the left from the tab setting.

right margin The setting that controls the placing of rightmost characters on the page. If your document is ragged right, no character will extend beyond the right margin setting; if it is justified, all lines will end on the right margin setting (except possibly the last line of each paragraph).

screen The video screen on which your document and various menus, messages, and other information are displayed.

scroll To move the cursor forward or backward through a document, often resulting in the text of the document moving up or down the screen.

search To instruct the system to look for (find) a particular string of characters (a word or phrase), most often with a view to replacing those characters with others.

sentence The part of a document ending with a period, a question mark, or an exclamation mark. If your system advances or backs up by sentences, it will move from period to period (or the other sentence end marks). If there are several periods after initials (as in "F.D.R."), your system will read the text between each period as a sentence.

setting A location (margin setting) or command (typeface setting) you have put into a document or a program. Settings can be changed through appropriate menus.

shadow printing Some systems have the capability of overstriking characters with the same character moved slightly to one side of the original character, giving an impression of very bold printing.

shared printer A feature whereby more than one terminal can use the same printer.

shell A form document that permits the inclusion of variables taken from a list.

single density A method of formatting a disk to receive information that permits the storage of much less information per disk than double-density formatting. Systems that have double-density capability can normally read single-density diskettes, but single-density systems can read only single-density diskettes.

software Instructions on a program disk that tell the hardware (the physical equipment) what functions to perform and lead you through a series of menus to give the appropriate commands to make the system perform the functions you want. Software that works on your system to perform a wide variety of tasks can be purchased directly from your manufacturer or from companies that write software programs for your brand of equipment.

sort A feature that enables your system to organize lists in a wide variety of alphanumeric combinations. Each alphanumeric element in your sort is organized in either an ascending or a descending order (A to Z, 1 to 10000; or reverse).

spelling A feature that loads a spelling dictionary into the system to check the spelling of words in a document. The size of these dictionaries varies from 10,000 to 150,000 words, depending on the complexity of the software and the hardware. The larger the dictionary, the larger the working memory the system requires.

store To place (file) information on a disk, where it is available for recall and adjustment later. Depending on your system, print settings, lists, rulers or margins, paragraphs, phrases, and words can be stored in various ways for recall and inclusion in the content or formatting of a document.

subscript and superscript Characters printed off the main line of the text. Subscripts are generally printed half a line below the main line (H_2); superscripts above the main line (for footnote reference[5]).

swap Some systems have a special key function that exchanges a character with the character to its right. This is useful when correcting transpositions ("teh" instead of "the").

system The entire word processing unit, including all its hardware and software parts.

system page number The page number in a document assigned by the system for a given page. Each document begins with a system number of "1." If your document is the second one of a long work that is consecutively numbered, you may instruct the system to number the pages of the document beginning with another number, such as "38." In such a case, book or report page 38 will be system page 1, 39 will be 2, and so on. Depending on your system, you will need to use the system page number to "go to" or "print" a particular page (although some systems renumber all the pages in a document based on the initial page number you enter for the document).

systems disk The disk that holds the software program.

tab To enter a tab mark or to press the tab key to move the cursor over to the next tab mark.

temporary marker Markers that are automatically erased by the system when they are no longer needed. Some are entered by the system, such as a word-wrap return—as opposed to a hard return—that the system places at the end of each line when it drops down to the text line. If you rearrange the text, old word-wrap returns will be erased automatically, and new word-wrap returns entered automatically for the new lines, if line endings have been changed. The same happens to soft page end markers when lines are added or deleted.

text The part of a document that is normally displayed on the screen and printed out as the desired output. All the commands—both hard and soft—are considered not part of the text, even though they are essential to the word processing operation. The characters that show which commands have been entered can usually be seen only on the view (display) mode.

thousands separator On some systems a comma can be used in columnar work as a point on which numbers line up. The comma, in this case, separates the thousands position from the hundreds in large numbers.

top margin The number of lines between the top of the sheet of paper and the first line of printing.

typeface or typestyle The characters of a particular design of type appearance and size. A printwheel will contain characters of a single typestyle or typeface and of a single pitch. Light Italic is an example of a typeface, as are Boldface and Prestige.

underline To print with a line under the text for emphasis or as a substitute for italics. Each system has special function keys to make underlining easy.

update To revise text and bring the information on a disk to current status. It is especially important to update backup copies of disks, so you don't inadvertently use disks that are unlike the most recently revised printout.

uppercase The capitalized form of letters. The term is taken from earlier printing times when these letters were manually taken one by one by typesetters from a large compartmentalized drawer (called a "case") in which the capitalized letters were stored in compartments located at the upper third of the case.

variable Information, usually in a list or in a stored paragraph, that can be inserted automatically into a standardized form (shell) document.

view mode A special display of the document that shows all the commands as well as the text.

word A group of characters separated from adjoining groups by space. A punctuation mark is considered by the system to be part of the word it is attached to. The space following a word is also usually read by the system as being part of that word. When deleting the characters that make up a word, it is also necessary to delete the appropriate space, since the system does not do so automatically.

word processing The use of a computer system to create, edit, store, and print text. Dedicated word processors are computers in which many word processing functions are built into the construction of the hardware and the nature of the program in the software to perform the required tasks as rapidly and efficiently as possible.

word wrap A feature wherein a word that is entered and passes over the right-hand margin drops down to form the first word of the next line. This feature is performed automatically on word processors. Word wraps will be automatically readjusted by the system when line endings are changed due to text editing.

work station The screen/disk drive/computer/keyboard parts of your word processor considered as the place where you perform your word processing. The printer is not automatically a part of your work station, since you can share a printer with another work station.

algae, Simplest green plants.

alternation of generations, Life cycle in which an asexual generation follows a sexual generation.

altricial, Born helpless.

ameba, Simplest (one-celled) animal.

amphibian, Vertebrates that live part of their lives in water and may live part of their lives on land.

anal spot, Weak point in cell membrane for elimination of solid wastes (paramecium).

anemia, Deficiency of red blood corpuscles or hemoglobin in red blood corpuscles.

antennae (sing.: antenna), Sense organs, or "feelers," on heads of insects and related arthropods.

anther, Pollen-producing structure of the stamen of flowering plants (part of male reproductive organ).

anthropologist, One who specializes in the study or science of man and his activities as a rational animal.

antibiotic, Chemical substance produced by a living thing which can stop growth of some disease-producing bacteria, virus, or protozoa.

antibodies, Chemical substances in blood that fight against bacteria, toxins and other foreign substances.

antiseptic, A substance that prevents growth of some bacteria and destroys others.

antitoxin, A substance produced in animal bodies that counteracts harmful effects of disease-producing organisms; may provide immunity to certain diseases.

aphid, "Ant-cow"; provides nourishing fluid for ants; receives shelter and protection from ants.

appendage, A structure or organ attached to the main body.

appendix, Vestigial organ in man; part of digestive tube.

aquatic, Water-living.

arboreal, Tree-living.

Archaeopteryx, Fossil bird-form showing relationship to reptiles.

arteriosclerosis, Hardening of the arteries.

artery, Blood vessel that carries blood away from the heart to all parts of the body.

aseptic, Free of microorganisms; sterile.

asexual, Reproduction without the union of two unlike parent cells.

assimilation, Process by which digested food is changed into protoplasm.

astigmatism, Defect in the curvature of the eyes; results in indistinct vision.

atabrine, Synthetic drug used in the treatment of malaria.

atoll, Coral reef in the form of a ring.

atom, The smallest quantity of an element that enters into chemical combination.

ATP, adenine triphosphate, A high-energy compound produced during respiration.

auricle, Upper chamber of the heart which receives blood from the veins.

Australopithecus africanus, A South African man-ape genus, a meat-eater and tool-user, a member of the Australopithecine group.

Australopithecines, A group of man-apes, ancestral to man, who lived around 3 million years ago.

auxin, Plant hormone that controls plant growth.

axon, Main, long fiber or branch leading from a neuron; carries impulses away from neuron cell body.

B

bacillus, Rod-shaped bacteria.

backbone, Bony, internal vertebral or spinal column.

bêche-de-mer, Sea cucumbers, dried and used for food (related to starfish).

beriberi, Deficiency disease caused by lack of thiamin (B_1 of B complex).

binary fission, Simple splitting of a parent cell into two daughter cells.

bivalve, Mollusk having two shells (clam, oyster).

botulism, Food poisoning caused by specific bacteria.

bronchi, Bronchial tubes branching from the trachea or windpipe and leading into each lung.

budding, Form of asexual reproduction; growth from mother cell which remains attached to or separates from mother cell.

calcareous, Made of calcium.

calorie, A heat-measuring unit used in reference to foods.

calyx, Sum total of sepals or outermost leaflike structures of a true flower.

capillary, Smallest blood vessel in the body; between and connecting an artery and a vein; in closest contact with body cells for exchange of digested food, gases, and waste fluids.

carnivorous, Meat-eating.

cartilage, Soft, flexible, prebone tissue; "gristle."

castings, Undigested solids containing soil (excreted from the earthworm); enriches the topsoil.

catalyst, Activating agents that bring about changes but are not themselves changed during the processes.

caterpillar, Larval stage in the metamorphosis of butterfly and moth.

cattaloes, Hybrids resulting from crossbreeding of a buffalo and a cow.

cell, The unit of protoplasmic structure and function of all living things.

cellulose, Organic substance found in the cell walls of plant cells.

cerebellum, Part of the vertebrate brain behind the cerebrum; regulates muscular activity and controls body balance.

cerebrum, Largest area of brain; center of conscious mental processes and voluntary muscular activity.

chemotherapy, Branch of medical science; study of the use of drugs and other substances of chemical nature in the treatment of specific diseases.

chlorophyll, Green color pigment in plant cells; necessary for photosynthesis.

choroid coat, Membrane around the eyeball that contains blood vessels for nourishment and pigmentation for eye color.

chrysalis, Pupa stage of butterfly (similar to cocoon of moth); quiescent stage before adulthood.

cilia, Threads of protoplasm surrounding entire cell of paramecium; used for locomotion.

coccus, Round type of bacteria.

coccyx, Bone at end of spinal column consisting of four fused vertebrae; tail-like vestigial structure in man.

cochlea, Snail shell-like portion of inner ear which contains nerve endings of auditory nerve.

cocoon, Pupa stage in the metamorphosis of a moth; quiescent stage.

colchicine, Plant extract (drug type) used in experiments on Jimson weeds to induce formation of mutants.
cold-blooded, Having the same body temperature as that of the immediate environment.
compound, A substance resulting from the chemical combination of one or more elements.
conditioned reflex, An acquired response; a response to a stimulus other than the usual or original one.
conjugation, Temporary union of two similar cells during which there is an exchange of nuclear material.
corm, An underground plant stem that stores food for the plant.
cornea, Transparent layer covering the front of the eyeball.
corolla, The sum total of the petals of a flower.
corpuscle, Blood cell (red or white).
cotyledon, Part of a seed that contains stored food for the embryo plant.
cretin, One who was born with a serious deficiency of the thyroid gland.
cutin, Transparent, waxy secretion that protects outer surface of some leaves.
cytoplasm, Protoplasm of the cell minus the nucleus.

D

dendrite, A branching process of a neuron which carries impulses to the cell body.
dental caries, Tooth decay.
dentine, Bony portion of the tooth beneath the enamel.
diaphragm, A layer of muscle tissue that separates the chest from the abdominal cavity in mammals; important in breathing process.
diatom, A species of algae; cell is enclosed in boxlike shell containing silica.
diffusion, Spreading of molecules of gas or liquid from an area of greatest density toward an area of lower density.
dinosaur, Extinct, prehistoric reptile.
disinfectant, A substance used to destroy harmful bacteria; usually too strong to be used on the body.
dissemination, Distribution (as of seeds).
dominant, Referring to hereditary characteristics or traits that show in a hybrid.
DNA, Deoxyribonucleic acid, The material in a cell that makes up the genes and controls the cell.

E

ecology, The study of the relationships of living things to one another and to their environment.
ectoderm, The outer layer of cells; one of the three germ layers of an embryo.
efferent, Referring to nerves that carry impulses away from the brain to glands or muscles; motor nerves.
electrocardiograph, A machine used to make a recording of electrical waves from the heart; used in diagnosis of heart conditions.
element, A substance that cannot be further simplified by chemical means.
embryo, A young plant or animal before germination or birth.
endocrine, Referring to ductless glands that secrete hormones or "body regulators."
endoderm, The inner layer of cells; an embryonic layer.
endoplasmic reticulum, The cell "skeletal system"; provides transport system between cell parts and a surface on which reactions may take place.
endoskeleton, Bony skeleton within the body of vertebrate animals.
enzymes, Chemical substances in plants and animals that induce or hasten chemical changes (as in digestion) without being, in themselves, changed.
Eohippus, Prehistoric horse.
epiglottis, A lid of tissue that covers the opening of the windpipe or trachea during the act of swallowing.
erosion, The wearing away of a substance (soil) by the action of water, wind, etc.
esophagus, The gullet, or food tube, leading from the mouth to the stomach.
estrogen, Female hormone, responsible for secondary sex characteristics.
eugenics, The study of the improvement of the human race, applying the laws of heredity.
euthenics, A science that deals with improving the race by improving the environment.
evolution, Succession of gradual changes that take place in an individual plant or animal or species of plant or animal or form of life, over a long period of time, usually from the simple toward the more complex.
excretion, The process by which waste products are eliminated from a living organism.
exoskeleton, An outer or external skeleton (shell of crayfish).

F

fauna, Animals within a given life zone or natural habitat.
feces, Indigestible, solid waste materials.
fertilized egg, Result of the union of male cell with female cell.
fetus, Unborn young of mammals, after it has assumed the appearance of the parents.
fibrinogen, A substance in the blood plasma that is changed to fibers to form a "clot" under certain conditions.
fins, Organs of locomotion, steering, and balance of fish.
flaccid, A soft or relaxed condition of a cell, usually due to lack of water within the cell.
flora, Sum total of all plants within a given life zone or natural habitat.
fossil, Petrified remains, imprints, tracks, or other markings of prehistoric plants or animals.
fraternal twins, Twins that develop from two separate eggs fertilized at approximately the same time.
frond, The leafy part of a fern.
fruit, A ripened ovary and its contents (seeds) plus any parts of the flower adhering closely to the ovary.
fry, Young fish with yolk sac still attached but almost used up.
function, The use or work of any living organism or part thereof.
fungus, Plant that lacks chlorophyll; a thallophyte (simplest group); dependent on dead or living organic food.

G

gamete, A sexual reproductive cell; a female gamete is an ovum or egg cell and a male gamete is a sperm cell.
gametogenesis, Process during which gametes, or sex cells, are formed.
ganglion, A mass of nerve cells.
gene, A unit in a chromosome that carries hereditary characteristics.
genetics, The science of heredity.
geologist, One who studies the science of geology, the study of the earth's crust, past and present.
gills, Organs of breathing of fish.
gizzard, Muscular organ of earthworms, birds, and some other animals in which food is crushed and partly digested.
glycogen, "Animal starch"; a carbohydrate stored in the liver and present in muscles.
Golgi bodies, Help to produce secretions in animal cells.
grafting, Joining a twig or scion to another plant stem called a stock.
guard cells, Cells on either side of a stoma which regulate the size of the stoma opening.
gullet, Esophagus or food tube extending from the back of the mouth to the stomach.

H

hemoglobin, Red coloring matter in red blood corpuscles of vertebrates; an organic compound that carries oxygen.
hemophilia, Hereditary disease in which the blood will not clot normally even after a slight injury.
herbivorous, Plant-eating animal.
heredity, The passing on of traits or characteristics from parent to offspring through the gametes.
hibernate, Prolonged sleeplike inactivity during a winter season (bears, frogs, etc.).
Homo erectus, Recent ancestors of man, who made tools in the Acheulian Tradition.
Homo habilis, An ape-man ancestor, the first to make tools.
Homo sapiens, Scientific name of present-day man.
hormone, Substance that is secreted by ductless or endocrine glands directly into the bloodstream; controls actions in some part of the body or some body process; "chemical messengers."
humus, Substances in soil formed by decay of plants and animals.
hybrid, A plant or animal carrying unlike genes in the same pair of chromosomes.

hybridization, Crossing individuals in breeding that carry contrasting traits.
hypocotyl, Part of a plant embryo that develops into the root of the plant.

I

identical twins, Twins that result from the fertilization of a single egg cell which splits into two like parts in early cell division.
immunity, Ability to resist a certain disease because of a previous attack or natural ability to resist it or by preventative inoculations, vaccinations, etc.
incisor, The cutting teeth with chisel-like edges; front teeth in jaws of mammals.
ingestion, Process of taking in food.
inorganic, That which is not alive, nor ever was alive, nor came from anything alive.
insectivorous, Insect-eating animal or plant.
insulin, A hormone secreted by the islands of Langerhans of the pancreas; controls oxidation of sugars.
invertebrate, An animal without a backbone.
iris, The colored part of the eye of vertebrate animals.
irradiation, Exposure of food, human skin, etc. to ultraviolet rays.

K

kelp, Brown algae seaweed; used for food in China and Japan; burned to produce iodine.
kidney, Paired organs in vertebrates that extract nitrogenous wastes from the blood for elimination.

Lacteal, Small lymph vessel in the center of each villus; absorbs digested fats from the small intestines.
larva, Wormlike, eating stage in the complete metamorphosis of some insects (caterpillar of moth and butterfly, maggot of fly).
larynx, Voice box ("Adam's apple") in the trachea; contains vocal cords.
lateral line, Line of nerve cells on sides of fish; indicates depth of water for the fish; helps keep balance.
legume, Plants that have pod fruits (peas, beans).
lens, A transparent body in the eye that is biconvex; light rays pass through the lens and are bent to focus on the retina.
lichen, A symbiotic relationship between a fungus plant and a green algae; common on moist rock surfaces.
ligament, A band of tissue that connects bone to bone.
linkage, Referring to the grouping together of genes (in a chromosome) that are transmitted together to the offspring.
lungs, Organs of breathing of vertebrate animals from adult amphibians through mammals.
lymph, Part of the blood serum which is outside the blood vessels; bathes the cells.
lysosomes, Contain digestive enzymes in animal cells.

M

maggot, Larval stage in the metamorphosis of the common housefly.
malaria, Disease caused by a parasitic protozoan (malarial plasmodium) which is carried by and transmitted by the anopheles mosquito; plasmodium lives in the bloodstream of man (alternate host).
mammals, Vertebrates that have hair on their bodies, breathe by means of lungs, bear their young alive, and nourish their young with milk from mammary glands.
mammary gland, Milk-secreting glands of mammals.
medulla oblongata, Posterior part of the brain connecting the spinal cord; controls respiration and heartbeat.
meiosis, Reduction division; reduction of original number of chromosomes so that each sex cell (egg or sperm) has half the original number of chromosomes characteristic of the species.
mesentery, Tissue that holds the intestine in place in the abdominal cavity.
mesoderm, The middle layer of cells formed during embryonic development.
metamorphosis, The changes in form an organism undergoes during its development from the egg to the adult stage.
mitochondria, Where food is oxidized and energy produced in a cell for the cell activities.
mitosis, Cell division during which the chromatin material (chromosomes) splits in half making like pairs.
mixture, The physical combination of two or more elements or compounds, each of which retains its original characteristics and can be separated from each other.
molecule, Smallest particle of a compound capable of having the properties of the compound.
morphology, The study of the structure of plants and animals.
mutation, A sudden appearance of a new trait or variation that is heritable.
myxedema, A disease in adults resulting from a deficiency of thyroid hormone.

N

nacre, "Mother-of-pearl"; substance that forms a pearl in the "irritated" bivalve.
neuron, A nerve cell.
nitrate, A compound containing nitrogen, oxygen, and at least one other element.
nuclear membrane, Double membrane around the nucleus of a cell that controls movement in and out of the nucleus.
nucleus, Specialized protoplasm in a cell that controls all cellular activity in general and governs heredity in reproduction in particular (contains chromatin material).

O

oogenesis, Process of sex-cell reproduction in the female.
organ, A group of different tissues working together to perform a specific function.
organic, Pertaining to something living, or which was at one time living, or which was produced by something living.
organism, Any living plant or animal.
osmosis, Diffusion through a semipermeable membrane.
ovary, Organ of the reproductive system of flowering plants and higher animals in which eggs are produced.
oxidation, The chemical combination of oxygen with another element.

paleontologist, One who studies fossils.
pancreas, A digestive gland that pours digestive juice into the small intestine; also a ductless gland that controls sugar oxidation.
Paranthropus (Australopithecus robustus), Vegetarian member of the Australopithecines.
parasite, An organism that takes its nourishment from another living organism without giving any benefits to its host.
parathyroid, Ductless or endocrine glands near the thyroid glands in the neck; regulates calcium assimilation in the body.
Pasteurization, Process of treating milk by heating it to 145° F. and rapidly cooling it, thereby killing most of the harmful bacteria therein.
pathogenic, Referring to disease-producing bacteria.
pellagra, Deficiency disease resulting from lack of vitamin niacin (PP of B complex).
pelvis, Broad bones that support the organs of the abdomen.
penicillin, An organic chemical product isolated from a common mold; used in treating diseases caused by certain types of bacteria; now synthesized.
pericardium, A membrane surrounding and protecting the heart.
peristalsis, Wavelike muscular motion of the food tube of higher vertebrate animals which forces food along alimentary tube.
phagocyte, White corpuscles of the blood which act as scavengers.
photosynthesis, Manufacture of carbohydrates by the green plant in the sunshine.
pineal, An endocrine or ductless gland located in the brain; active only in early childhood, regulating growth.
pistil, The female reproductive organ in the flowering plant.
pituitary, Ductless or endocrine gland; called the "master gland" because it controls all other endocrine glands.
plankton, Minute forms of plant and animal life floating near the surface in the ocean.
plasma, The liquid portion of the blood of vertebrates.
platelets, Small cells in blood that aid in clotting.

Pleistocene, Period of earth from 1,750,000 years ago to 50,000 years ago.
pleurococcus, Single-celled (algae) green plant that grows on the shady side of tree trunks; the "Indian's Friend."
plumule, Part of the plant embryo that develops into the shoot with its leaves.
pollen, Grains formed in the anther of a flower or the male cone of an evergreen; contains sperm, or male sex cells.
pollination, Transfer of pollen from the anther of a flower to the stigma.
precocial, Young born relatively independent of their parents.
primate, Order of mammals that includes monkeys, apes, etc., and man.
Proconsul (Dryopithecus africanus), Prehistoric ape. protein, A food nutrient necessary for the building of protoplasm; contains nitrogen in addition to oxygen, hydrogen, and carbon.
protoplasm, The living substance of all plants and animals.
pseudopod, Projection of protoplasm; aids in locomotion of ameba.
ptomaine, A type of food poisoning produced by bacteria of decay.
pulp, Innermost section of a human tooth; contains blood vessels and nerves.
pulse, Rhythmic wave of motion indicating beat of the heart felt in an artery.
pupa, Quiescent stage in the complete metamorphosis of an insect; stage during which the adult develops.
pupil, Referring to the round opening in the iris of the eye through which light rays enter the eye.

quinine, Drug used in the treatment of malaria.

R

Ramapithecus, Man-ape predecessor of man.
recessive, Referring to a hidden trait or characteristic in a hybrid contrasting pair.
rectum, Terminal end of large intestine; functions in the elimination of solid wastes from the body.
reduction division, See Meiosis.
reflex, Simple, involuntary action in response to a stimulus; no thought involved.
regeneration, The act of growing a new body part for one that has been injured or lost.
reproduction, The process by which new individuals of the same kind are produced by a plant or animal; producing offspring.
respiration, A life function in which oxygen is taken into the cells and the waste gas, carbon dioxide, is given off.
retina, Innermost layer of tissue in the eyeball; contains nerve endings (from optic nerve) that receive light stimulus.
rhizome, Underground plant stem that stores food for the plant.
ribosome, Small body in a cell, the sites of protein synthesis.
rickets, Deficiency disease resulting from an insufficiency of vitamin D in the diet or inadequate assimilation of it.
RNA, ribonucleic acid, Messenger RNA carries genetic code from nucleus to cytoplasm; transfer RNA moves about the cytoplasm picking up amino acids.
roe, Fish eggs.
root hairs, Elongated epidermal cells of a root; for absorption of soil water.

S

saliva, Digestive juice secreted by glands in the mouth.
saprophyte, Plant or animal that lives on dead organic matter (some fungi).
sclerotic coat, Tough, outer protective layer of the eye.
scurvy, Deficiency disease caused by lack of vitamin C in the diet.
scutes, Scales on the under or belly surface of snakes; aid in locomotion.
secretion, A chemical substance produced by a living cell (enzyme or hormone).
sedimentary, Referring to a type of rock that is formed by materials deposited from suspension in water.
semicircular canal, Part of the inner ear; functions as organ of balance.
Sequoia, Oldest living tree on earth; a giant redwood tree in the evergreen group.
serum, Blood plasma from which the fibrinogen has been removed.
sex-linked, Refers to a hereditary trait whose gene is in the X chromosome.
sexual, Referring to reproduction in which the new individual is a result of the union of an egg cell (female) and a sperm cell (male).
soluble, That which can be dissolved in a fluid.
spawn, To deposit eggs or roe (as fishes).
specialization, Referring to the adaptation of cells or groups of cells to perform a particular function.
sperm, The male sex cell or gamete.
spermatogenesis, Process of sex-cell production in males.
sphygmomanometer, Instrument used to measure blood pressure.
spinal cord, The main nerve cord of all vertebrates.
spiracles, Openings in the abdomen of insects through which they breathe.
spirillum, A spiral-shaped bacterium.
spirogyra, A filamentous green alga; commonly known as "pond scum."
spleen, Gland in vertebrates (except fish) that destroys used-up red blood cells; a "graveyard" of blood cells.
spore, Nonsexual reproductive body, common to fungi, bacteria, mosses, and other plants and some protozoa.
stamen, Male reproductive organ in flowering plants.
stethoscope, Instrument used to listen to heart sounds and lung sounds.
stigma, Top of a pistil of a flower, part that receives pollen.
stoma, Opening on lower surface of a green leaf through which there is an exchange of gases and water vapor.
streptomycin, An antibiotic used in the treatment and control of tuberculosis and other pulmonary diseases, infections of the urinary tract and other diseases.
symbiosis, A state in which two dissimilar organisms live together to mutual advantage (lichen).
synapse, The space over which a nerve impulse passes from the dendrites of one neuron to the dendrites of another.
system, A group of organs working together to perform a particular function (digestive system).

T

tadpole, The fishlike stage in the metamorphosis of a frog and a toad. taxonomist, One who specializes in classification of plants and animals.
tendon, Tissue that attaches a muscle to a bone.
tentacles, Flexible armlike projections of jellyfish and related animals; used in food-getting and locomotion.
testes, The primary male sex organs.
testosterone, Male hormone responsible for secondary sex characteristics.
thorax, The middle division of an animal's body; between the head and abdomen.
thymus, An endocrine or ductless gland; controls growth.
thyroid, An endocrine or ductless gland in the neck, just below the larynx; controls rate of metabolism in the body.
tissue, A group of similar cells that performs the same function.
toxins, Poisons released by disease-producing bacteria.
trachea, Windpipe; tube that delivers air from throat to lungs in vertebrates; air passages in insects.
transpiration, Loss of water by evaporation through the stomates of the leaves of plants.
trichocysts, Dartlike substances ejected by paramecium as a means of defense.
tropism, Response of plants and simple animals to external stimuli.

U

urea, Nitrogenous waste collected and excreted by the kidneys.
univalve, Mollusk with a single shell (snail).

vaccine, Substance used in preventive inoculation; (virus of cowpox used in inoculation against smallpox).
vacuoles, Small spaces in cytoplasm of a cell, containing liquid or solid food or waste matter.
vein, Blood vessel in which blood returns to the heart from all over the body; liquid-conducting vessels in leaves.

venom, Poison secreted by glands of poisonous snakes, lizards, etc.
ventricle, Lower, muscular chamber of a vertebrate heart; pumps blood through arteries to the rest of the body.
vertebrae, Bones of the backbone.
vertebrates, Group of animals that has internal backbones.
vestigial, Referring to a remnant of a once useful organ or a structure formerly more complete in function.
villus, A small (microscopic) projection in the lining of the small intestine; organ of absorption of digested food.
virus, Submicroscopic substance that has characteristics both organic and inorganic; causative agent of some diseases.

W

warm-blooded, Referring to an animal that maintains a constant body temperature.

Y

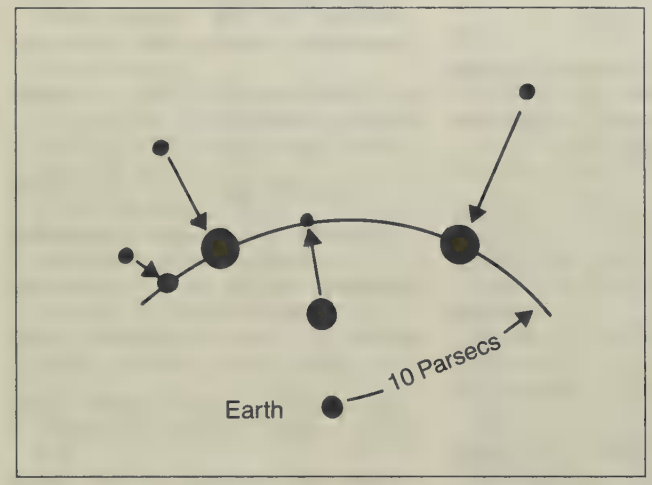
yolk sac, Stored food material for embryo vertebrate.

Z

zygote, The result of the fusion of two dissimilar gametes.

Glossary of Physics Terms

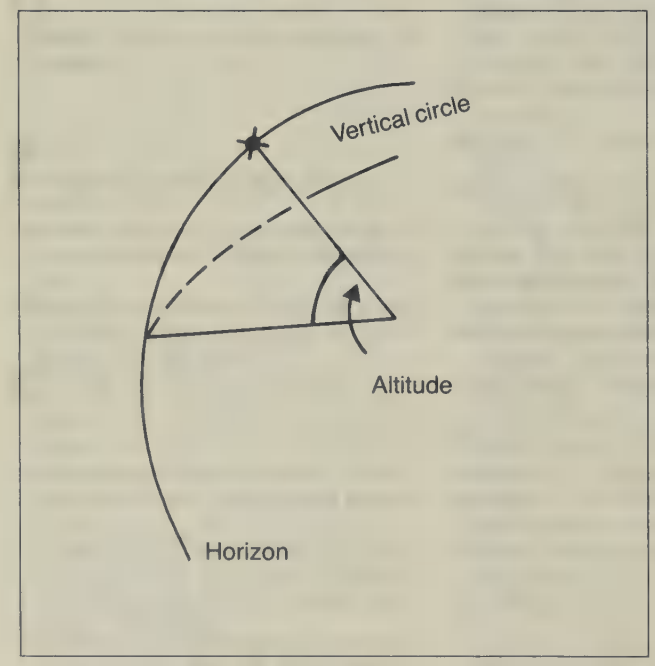
Absolute Magnitude The magnitude that would be assigned to a star if it were placed at a distance of 10 parsecs from the observer. Stars closer to us than that distance would appear fainter. Stars farther from the solar system would appear brighter.



Achromatic Lens A lens that transmits white light without dispersing it into a color spectrum. It usually consists of two component parts, cemented together to form one unit.

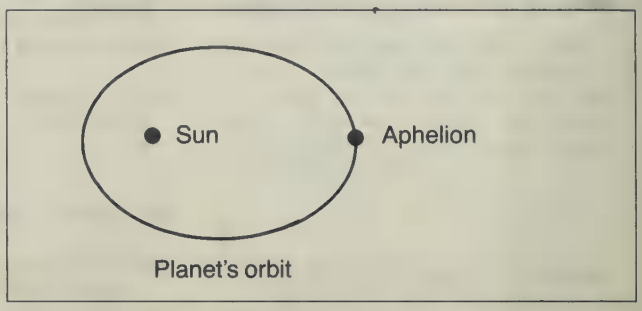
Albedo Percentage of light reflected by a body, such as a planet, of total amount of light falling on it.

Altitude Angular distance between the horizon and a given object, measured along a vertical circle.



Annular Eclipse An eclipse of the central portion of the solar disk; an outer ring shows.

Aphelion The point on planet's orbit farthest from the sun.



Apogee Point on the moon's orbit farthest from the earth.

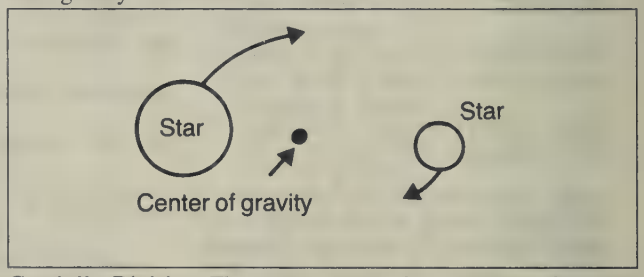
Apollo The name assigned to the U.S. project, whose mission was to land men on the moon. Also the name of the vehicles used. Apollo 11 landed Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin on the moon on July 20, 1969.

Artificial Satellite A man-made object placed into an orbit about the earth or about another celestial body such as the sun or the moon.

Astronomical Unit The average distance between the earth and the sun 93 million miles or, more exactly, 92,955,700.

Aurora A diffused glow of light in the form of curtains, or bands, seen at high latitudes (70°N or 70°S). The glow is due to the interaction between the solar wind and particles in the earth's atmosphere. The aurora in the northern hemisphere is known as the Aurora Borealis, or northern lights; in the southern hemisphere it is known as the Aurora Australis, or southern lights.

Binary Star Two close stars held together by a gravitational force and revolving like a dumbbell about a common center of gravity. The center is closer to the more massive star.



Cassini's Division The empty space that separates the outer rings of Saturn from the bright inner rings.

Celestial Sphere An imaginary sphere of infinite radius surrounding the earth and serving as a screen against which all celestial objects are seen.

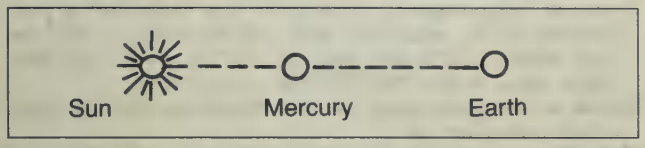
Cepheid A star the brightness of which varies periodically because of pulsations.

Chromatic Aberration (also called Color Defect) Blurring of image due to the separation of colors by a lens. A point of white light in the object appears as a complete spectrum of colored points in the image.

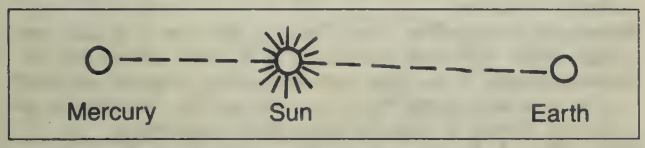
Collimator (also called Collimating Lens) A lens whose function it is to make rays of light parallel.

Colure, equinoctial (also called Prime Hour Circle) The hour circle that goes through the first point of Aries. The hour angles (same as longitude on earth) are measured from the equinoctial colure.

Conjunction Apparent line-up of sun, earth, and a planet. Inferior conjunction is when the planet is between the earth and the sun.



Superior conjunction is when the planet is on the opposite side of the sun.

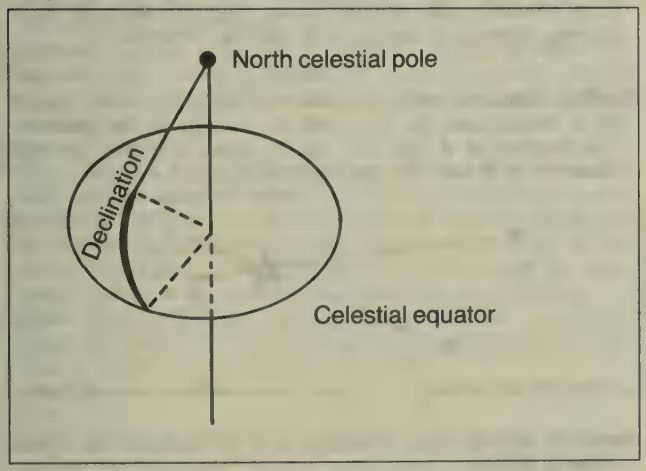


Constellation A group of stars apparently close together in the sky. Modern astronomy recognizes 88 such groups (e.g., Cassiopeia, Leo, etc.). Actually, the individual stars of a constellation may be great distances apart and moving in different directions one from the other.

Copernican System The system that assumes that the sun is at the center, and the earth and the other planets move around it.

Culmination The position of a celestial body when it is on the meridian. A star is said to be at its "upper culmination" when it has reached its highest point for the day.

Declination Angular distance of an object from the celestial equator, measured in degrees, minutes, and seconds. Analogous to latitude in geography.

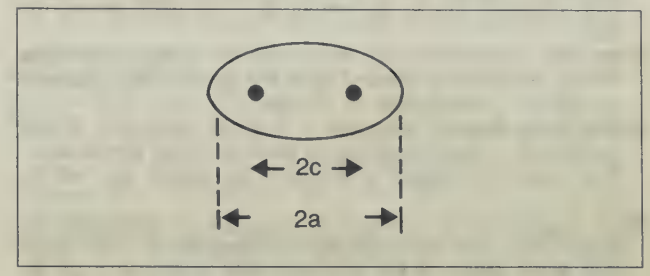


Diffraction of Light A phenomenon exhibited by light on passing through a narrow slit or a small aperture. The light is modified to form alternate dark and bright fringes.

Discrete Source A amall area in the sky—almost a point—from which very intense electromagnetic waves of radio frequency reach the earth. These points were formerly called radio stars.

Doppler Effect Change in frequency of light due to relative motion between observer and source of light.

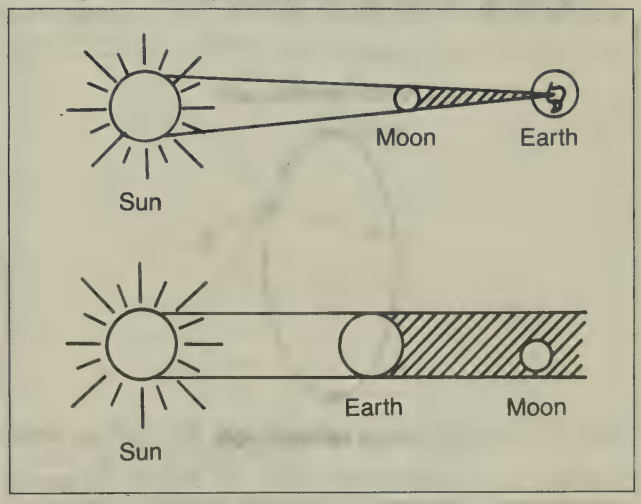
Eccentricity Eccentricity indicates the degree of flatness of an ellipse, or its departure from a circle. It is denoted by e; its value is obtained from the formula $e=\frac{2c}{2a}$, when 2c is the distance between the foci, and 2a is the length of the major axis. When e is small (e.g., .05), the ellipse approaches a circle in shape; when it is large (e.g., .8), the ellipse is elongated.



Eclipse

A. Solar. The sun's light is cut off by the moon's interposition between the sun and the earth.

B. Lunar. The moon darkens because the earth intercepts the sunlight on its way to the moon.



Ecliptic Two equivalent definitions are possible.

A. The great circle on the celestial sphere formed by the intersection of that sphere with the plane of the earth's orbit.

B. The path described on the celestial sphere by the sun during its apparent annual motion around the earth.

Elongation Angular distance from the sun, measured in degrees, minutes, and seconds of angle.

Ephemeris A book of tables showing computed daily positions of heavenly objects.

Equinox One of the points of intersection between the ecliptic and the celestial equator. When the sun is at one of these two points, the length of day and night are equal everywhere on the earth. The sun is at these points every year on or about March 21 (vernal) and September 23 (autumnal).

Evening Star This is not a star, but a planet, especially Mercury or Venus when seen in the western sky just after sunset.

Extragalactic Beyond our galaxy.

Faculae Areas on the surface of the sun that appear brighter by comparison to surrounding regions.

Flyby A research mission in which the satellite collects data while passing close to the object of research.

Galaxy A large community of stars in space, such as the Milky Way (our galaxy), to which the sun belongs. Galaxies contain billions of stars. Many are shaped in the form of a spiral.

Gemini The name given to the U.S. program, as well as to the vehicles, designed to prepare man for landing on the moon. Gemini 3 to Gemini 12 (1965–66) carried crews of two astronauts each. The program included space walks, rendezvous with other space craft, as well as docking techniques.

Granules The smallest visible units on the sun's surface. Granules or granulations have diameters hundreds of miles long. They change in size and in structure continuously.

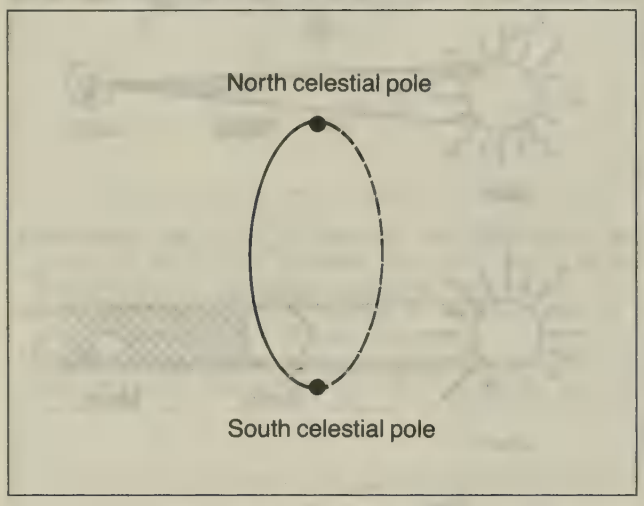
Heliocentric Parallax The apparent motion of nearby stars seen against the background of far away stars. The apparent motion is actually due to the revolution of the earth around the sun.

Helmholtz Contraction The theory that the energy of the light emitted by a star is derived from the gravitational potential energy (i.e., contraction) of the star.

Hertzsprung-Russell Diagram A diagram showing a scatter distribution of stars according to luminosity and temperature. The scatter distribution is related to the various ages of the stars.

Hour Angle This is analogous to longitude in geography: an angle between the local celestial meridian and the hour circle of a given object in the sky, measured westward from the meridian. It may be given in units of time (hours, minutes and seconds); 1 hour = 15 degrees of angle. Hour angles are easily visualized as either arcs along the celestial equator, or angles at the celestial poles.

Hour Circle This is similar to meridian in geography: a great circle passing through the two celestial poles.



Hubble's Constant The ratio of the velocity of recession to the distance of a galaxy. This ratio is 100 km/sec for every 1 million parsecs.

Infrared Radiation Invisible radiation of wavelength slightly longer than red light.

Ionosphere Several layers of ionized air high in the atmosphere. The ionosphere plays an important part in reflecting radio waves.

Libration Apparent "rocking" or "nodding" of moon or the planet Mercury. Due to this oscillation, some of the usually hidden sides are exhibited to the terrestrial observer.

Light Year The distance that light travels in a year.

Luminosity The ratio of the total light emitted by a celestial object to the total light emitted by the sun. Also, the total energy emitted by a star, per second.

Lunar Module The term for the vehicles that carried two men, in the Apollo project, from the command modules to the surface of the moon and back.

Magellanic Clouds These are not clouds; they are galaxies. Two relatively nearby galaxies visible from the southern hemisphere, of irregular shape, named after Magellan, the Portuguese explorer who first described them.

Magnitude (also called Apparent Magnitude) A number indicating the apparent brightness of a star. Bright stars are designated by small numbers (magnitude 1, say) while dim stars are designated by large numbers (e.g., magnitude 15).

Main Sequence A band in the scatter Hertzspung-Russell diagram. It includes more than 80 percent of all stars. The energy emitted by these stars is obtained from thermonuclear reactions in the core of the stars.

Mariner The name given to a U.S. series of space probes designated to obtain data from Venus, Mercury, and Mars. On December 14, 1962, Mariner 2 passed within 22,000 miles of Venus. Mariner 9 (launched on May 30, 1971) came within a distance of 900 miles of Mars. It was the first spacecraft to go into orbit around a planet other than earth. Mariner 10 (launched November 3, 1973) came within 3,600 miles of Venus and 450 miles of Mercury. This was the first probe of Mercury.

Mass-Luminosity Relationship This relationship, which applies to main sequence stars, states that luminosity is proportional to M^a, where M = mass and the power $a = 4\frac{1}{2}$, for stars whose mass is less than half the sun; $a = 3\frac{1}{2}$ for stars whose mass is more than $1\frac{1}{2}$ that of the sun.

Meteor A meteoroid during the time it is giving off light. Also called a shooting star.

Meteorite A meteoroid that survived, because of its size, collision with the earth's atmosphere and reached the earth's surface. Meteorites can be seen on exhibit in many natural history museums.

Meteoroid A tiny solid object, usually the size of a sand particle, which the earth encounters in its orbit around the sun.

Micrometeorite A fine dust particle floating in space, too small to be seen with unaided eye and too small to become incandescent during its passage through the atmosphere.

Milky Way A luminous band across the sky, of which our galaxy is part. The light is due to the fact that the vast majority of stars in our (disk-shaped) galaxy are located along this narrow band on the celestial sphere.

Morning Star This is not a star, but a planet, e.g., Mercury, when seen in the eastern sky just before sunrise.

Neap Tide The lowest tide of the month.

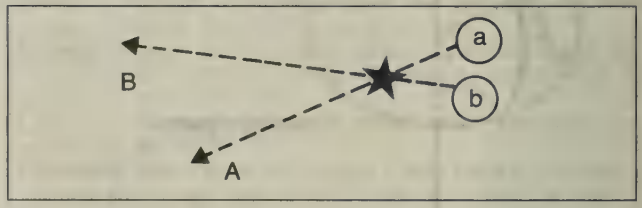
Nebula A vast cloud of gas or gas and dust in space.

Node A point of intersection of one orbit (say, the moon's) with the plane of another orbit (say, the earth's).

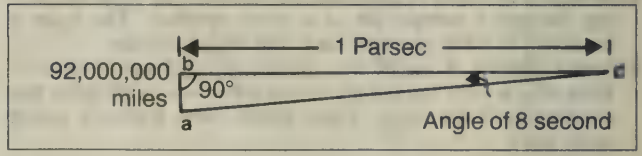
Nova A star that suddenly increases in brightness and later returns to its original value of brightness.

Occultation The eclipse of a star or a planet by the moon. The term occulation also applies to any large astronomical body passing between a smaller body and the observer.

Parallax Apparent shift of position of an object with respect to its background due to a shift in position of the observer. An observer at A sees the star in region a of the sky. An observer at B sees the same star in region b.

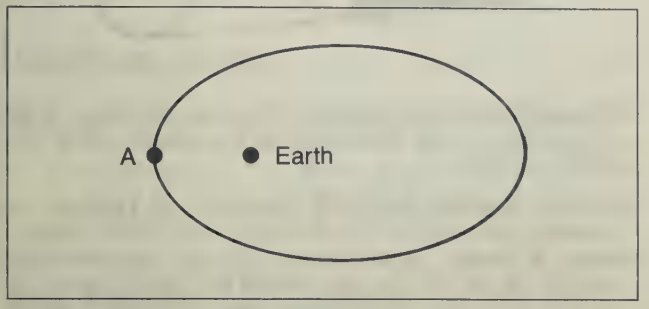


Parsec A unit of stellar distance. It is the distance BD in the triangle ABD.
One parsec is equal to 19.2 million million miles.

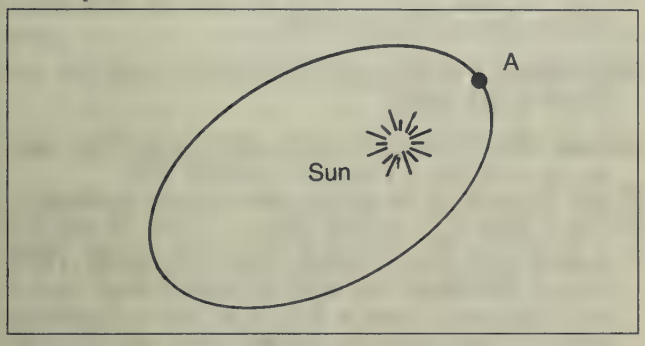


Penumbra The outer and lighter part of a shadow cast by a planet or satellite, as in regions A and B.

Perigee The point in orbit of, say, the moon nearest the earth (point A).



Perihelion The point in orbit of a planet or a comet nearest the sun (point A).



Photosphere The visible surface of the sun or star. Below it is the interior of the sun; above it, the atmosphere.

Pioneer The name given to the first series of U.S. unmanned space-probe vehicles. They were instrumental in developing launching and guiding techniques for the Mariner, Lunar Orbiter, Ranger, and Surveyor series.

Planet One of the nine bodies revolving about the sun in almost circular orbits. Planets are made visible to us by reflected sunlight. It is reasonable to assume that many stars have planets revolving about them.

Planetary Nebula A nebula resembling a planet in shape.

Planetoid (also called Asteroid) A small irregularly shaped solid body revolving about the sun. Also considered to be a minor planet.

Plasma An ionized gas.

Poles, Celestial Points of intersection of extensions of earth's axis and the celestial sphere.

Precession The slow change in direction of the earth's axis due to the gravitational pull of the moon on the bulge at the earth's equator. The slow change in the axis causes the westward motion of the equinoxes among the constellations.

Proper Motion of Star The angular velocity (in seconds of angle per year) of a star in a direction perpendicular to the line of sight of a terrestrial observer.

Protostar The portion of a nebula that is about to become a star.

Pulsar A neutron star emitting pulsed radio signals. The first pulsar was discovered in 1967. Its pulse lasts ⅓ of a second and repeats with great regularity every 1⅓ second.

Pulsating Stars Stars that periodically vary in brightness because of periodic changes in volume.

Quadrature An elongation of 90° east or west of the sun.

Quasar The popular name for quasi-stellar object. These are extremely luminous objects (the most luminous known) at enormous distances (the most distant object known), which generate incredible amounts of energy. The true nature of quasars is still under study.

Radial Velocity of Star The velocity (in miles or kilometers per second) in line of sight of a terrestrial observer.

Radiant Point of Meteors A point in the sky from which meteors seem to come.

Radio Astronomy The branch of astronomy that deals with the radio waves emitted by various celestial bodies, as well as the theory of their emission.

Radio Star See Discrete Source.

Radio Telescope An instrument used for examination of celestial objects by means of the radio waves emitted by these objects.

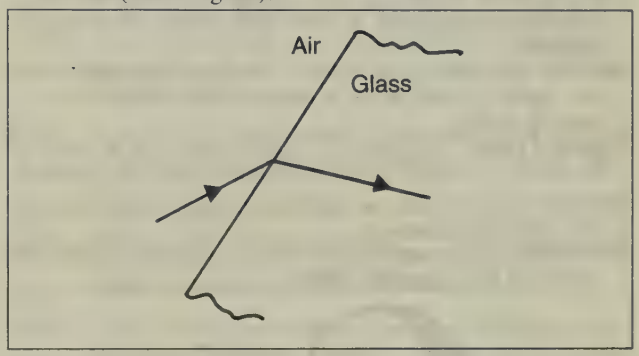
Radio Window The transparency of the atmosphere to radio waves that range between .25 cm and 30 m in length.

Ranger The name given to a series of nine U.S. lunar probe vehicles, designed to transmit photographs before crashlanding on the moon. More than 17,000 photographs were obtained from the Rangers, the closest one taken .2 seconds before impact.

Red Giant A member of the giant sequence in the Hertzsprung-Russell diagram. They have radii fifteen to thirty times larger than the radius of sun and luminosities a hundred times that of the sun.

Red Shift The shift of all spectral lines toward longer wavelengths observed in all galaxies. Galactic red shift is due to the expansion of the universe. Gravitational red shift is due to the high value of the mass of the emitter.

Refraction A change in direction of light on entering a different medium (such as glass).



Resolving Power of Telescope The power to separate two close points into two distinct units.

Retrograde Motion Apparent backward (westward) motion of a planet, through a starfield.

Reversing Layer The lowest of the three solar atmospheric layers; it is responsible for most of the dark lines in the solar spectrum.

Right Ascension The angular distance from the prime meridian to a celestial body measured eastward along the celestial equator from 0° to 360°, or from 0 to 24 hours. Analogous to longitude in geography.

Rocket A tube designed to move through space that derives its thrust by ejecting hot, expanding gases—called a jet—that have been generated in its motor. The rocket contains within itself all the material needed for the production of the jet.

Saros The interval (about 18⅓ years) between two successive lunar or solar eclipses of the same series.

Satellite A celestial body revolving about one of the planets; e.g., the moon. Also any small body that revolves about a larger body, man-made or otherwise.

Sedimentary Rocks Rocks formed by precipitation from water or any other solution.

Service Module That part of the vehicle in the Apollo and other programs that contains the power, supplies, and fuel.

Sidereal Period The interval of time required by a planet to make one revolution (as seen from one of the fixed stars) about the sun.

Solar Constant The quantity of radiant solar heat, 1.94 calories per minute, received per square centimeter of the earth's surface.

Solar Wind The material, mainly protons and electrons, streaming out from the sun into space. The sun loses normally millions of tons per second of its mass because of this wind.

Solstice The point of maximum declination of the earth on the ecliptic. The solstices are halfway between the equinoctial points. In the northern hemisphere, the summer solstice occurs when the sun is farthest north from the equator; the winter solstice, when the sun is farthest south.

Space Probe An unmanned vehicle that is sent into space to obtain scientific data.

Spectrograph An instrument that (A) collimates (makes parallel rays of light), then (B) disperses the light (by means of a prism or grating) into a spectrum, and, finally, (C) produces a photograph of the spectrum.

Spectroheliograph An instrument that photographs the sun in monochromatic (single color) light.

Spectroscopic Binary A system of two stars that can be detected only with the aid of a spectroscope.

Spherical Aberration A shape defect of a lens. Light passing a spherical lens near its edge is converged more than light passing the center of the same lens, which causes the image to blur.

Spiral Nebula A galaxy of stars (not a nebula) in the form of a spiral.

Star A large globe of intensely hot gas, shining by its own light (e.g., the sun).

Sunspots Dark (by contrast with the surroundings) patches that appear from time to time on the photosphere of the sun.

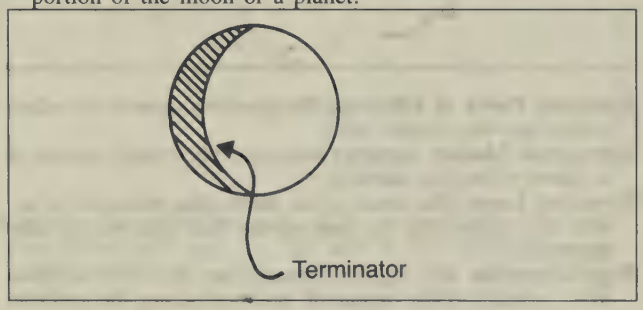
Supernova A star that quite suddenly increases, perhaps a million times, in brightness. It is similar to a nova, but its increase is vastly greater. It never fully returns to its original brightness.

Surveyor The name given to a U.S. series of unmanned probes that landed on the moon to obtain data prerequisite for a manned landing.

Synodic Period The interval of time required by a planet or the moon to complete one revolution, as seen from the earth.

Telescope In astronomy, an instrument used to collect radiation from celestial objects.

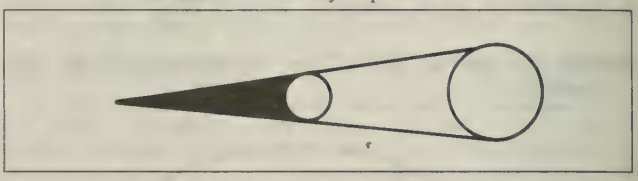
Terminator The boundary between the illuminated and dark portion of the moon or a planet.



Transit The motion of a small body (e.g., Mercury) across the face of a larger body (e.g., the sun).

Tropical Year The ordinary year. The year used in everyday life.

Umbra The dark shadow cast by a planet or a satellite.



Universal Time Greenwich time. The mean solar time at the 0° meridian passing through Greenwich, England. Used as a world standard.

Van Allen Radiation Belts Two doughnut-shaped regions surrounding the earth in which high-energy particles are trapped.

Velocity of Escape The velocity that an object must acquire in order to escape from the gravitational pull exerted upon it by another body. The velocity of escape at the earth's surface is 7 miles per second. Any terrestrial body that can reach this velocity will permanently leave the earth.

Venera The name given a U.S.S.R. series of space probes made to collect data about Venus.

White Dwarf A white star of low luminosity, small size, and extremely high density.

Zeeman Effect A change in wavelength of emitted light when the source of light is placed in a magnetic field.

Zenith The point on the celestial sphere directly overhead.

Zodiac A band of the celestial sphere, 8° wide, on each side of the ecliptic. The zodiac is divided lengthwise into twelve equal sections; each 30° section is popularly identified by a "sign of the zodiac." The signs are named for the constellations that were located in them at the time of Hipparchus more than 2,000 years ago. The sun, moon, and planets appear to "travel" within this belt. The sun passes through three signs each season of the year, e.g., during spring the sun passes through Aries, Taurus, and Gemini.

African American History

The Slave Trade

1526 Spanish explorers bring the first Africans to the new territory, twenty years after Spain approves the shipment of slaves to the New World. It is believed that the first group of Africans brought over managed to escape and settle inland with Native Americans.

1619 Twenty Africans arrive in Jamestown, Virginia, on a Dutch ship. They are brought in as indentured servants, with four to seven year contracts to fulfill. At the end of the term, they are released and are entitled to own property as members of the free laboring class.

1640 Laws begin to shift in the colonies from limited indentured servitude for imported servants to life indentured slaves. The first colony, Massachusetts, formally legalizes slavery in 1641. Laws are also passed in several states, including Virginia, that punish people who harbor any escaped servant or slave.

1650 Virginia holds 300 slaves.

1652 Rhode Island passes a statute prohibiting slavery. It is unenforced and openly violated by residents.

1661 The House of Burgesses, Virginia's assembly, votes in legislation that children born in the colony will have their status determined by whether their mother is bound or free. The law formally recognizes the institution of slavery in Virginia.

1663 Maryland votes in a slave law that declares all blacks currently in or to be brought into Maryland as slaves for life.

1660–1700 Slave codes are increasingly restrictive in the South. Regulations forbid slaves from owning property, travelling without written permission from their owners, and carrying weapons. Punishments for violation of crimes are swift and severe, including brandings, whippings, and hangings. The move toward such restriction and retribution is believed to be caused by fear of slave rebellions and uprisings.

Colonial and Revolutionary Times

1700 Ten percent of the population of the colonies, 27,000 blacks, are slaves. Ninety percent of the slaves live in the South, where tobacco, rice, and indigo are the major crops.

Judge Samuel Sewall publishes the first pamphlet, or tract, in the colonies condemning slavery. He argues in the three page document that no man has the right to own another.

1704 Elias Neau opens a religious education school for slaves at Trinity Church in New York City.

1705 Statutes are established in colonies that further limit the rights of blacks. Massachusetts forbids marriage between blacks and whites. Virginia bars blacks and Native Americans from military and civil office.

1712 In New York City there is a large rebellion by slaves. Nine whites are killed during the uprising, and the militia is called in to end the rioting. Twelve slaves are executed for charges stemming from the riots; another six commit suicide before their hanging. The religious school opened by Neau in 1704 is closed because the education of blacks is seen as dangerous.

1717 Cotton Mather opens a school for Native Americans and African Americans in Boston.

1721 Boston experiences an epidemic outbreak of smallpox. Oneissimus, a slave of Cotton Mather, explains how Africans immunize against the disease by inoculation. Mather passes the information on to Dr. Zabdiel Boylston, who inoculates Mather's son Thomas and two slaves. With their survival, Boylston inoculates 240 more, of which only six die of smallpox. The inoculation practice, despite its success, is met with widespread hostility in Boston.

1733 Spain declares that escaped slaves from the colonies will be free upon reaching Spanish territory, including Florida.

1735 John van Zandt is found innocent of murder charges that he whipped his slave to death. The ruling states that the death was caused by God's visitation.

1739 South Carolina experiences a series of slave rebellions. Revolt in Charleston leaves 21 whites and 44 blacks dead. The slave Cato leads a revolt in Stono River where 30 whites and an unknown number of blacks are killed. Berkeley county experiences the third revolt. All the rebellions are blamed on slaves attempting to get to Florida for their freedom.

1741 Twenty-nine blacks and four whites are executed for arson outbreaks in New York City. No direct proof is given for the crimes, and a prosecutor on the case later states that no conspiracy evidence linked those found guilty. Tense race relations are blamed for the atmosphere that led to the verdict that condemned the men.

1750 Crispus Attucks escapes slavery in Massachusetts.

1753 Benjamin Franklin publishes a tract that states that slavery is a bad economic system.

1761 Benjamin Banneker constructs a wooden clock that keeps precise time. The self-taught astronomer and mathematician produces a chiming clock that keeps accurate time for longer than twenty years.

1769 Thomas Jefferson proposes a law before the Virginia assembly that would emancipate slaves. It is rejected.

1770 Crispus Attucks is shot and killed, along with four white colonialists, in the Boston Massacre.

A school for blacks is established in Philadelphia by Anthony Benezet, a Quaker.

Phyllis Wheatley, an eighteen-year-old slave in Boston, has her poetry printed by The University of Cambridge in New England. Her work is lauded internationally and she tours London in 1773.

1773 Caesar Hendrick is freed by an all-white jury in Massachusetts. Suing his owner for wrongful enslavery, he is awarded freedom, financial reparations and court costs on the grounds that he was enslaved against his will.

1775 Peter Salem and Salem Poor fight at the Battle of Bunker Hill. They are later commended for their bravery and service to the army.

George Washington declares that no blacks can serve in the Continental Army. The British offer freedom to any black that serves with the Loyalist troops. Washington, after the British decision, reverses his order and allows blacks to remain in the army.

1776 With the revolution against England in full force, slaves are offered freedom if they enlist in some army companies. Maryland, in 1780, is the only southern state to enlist slaves, arming them for battle. Gradually, states award equal pay to black and white soldiers, with Connecticut the first to do so in 1777. Integration is still controversial, and two black companies are established.

The Declaration of Independence is ratified by all thirteen colonies, after Jefferson's passage condemning slavery is removed.

Ten thousand African Americans fight with colonial forces. Many are honored for valor and heroism, including Oliver Cromwell, William Flora, James Robinson, and Deborah Sampson (who fought disguised as a man).

1777 Vermont frees blacks and abolishes slavery. It is the first state to do so.

1780 Pennsylvania abolishes slavery, with a gradual system of emancipation.

1783 Massachusetts ends slavery and awards voting privileges to African Americans.

The Revolutionary War is over. The black regiments are disbanded.

James Derham purchases his freedom from his owner, a doctor with whom he apprenticed, and starts his own medical practice in New Orleans.

The Cotton Era, and Western Expansion

1784 Connecticut and Rhode Island ban slavery in their state boundaries.

1785 New York declares slavery illegal.

Lemuel Haynes becomes the first black minister to a white congregation, in Connecticut. Haynes is a veteran of the Revolutionary War, having served with distinction at Lexington.

1786 New Jersey bans slavery.

1787 The Northwest Territory is declared by Congress to be free—slavery is forbidden.

The Constitution of the United States is adopted by Congress. It sets five slaves as the equivalent of three freemen in census and electoral calculations. Importation of slaves from abroad is forbidden by law after 1808.

1789 Benjamin Banneker accurately predicts a solar eclipse.

1790 Banneker is appointed by George Washington to the Commission of the District of Columbia. He surveys the territory that becomes Washington, D.C.

Constitutional law declares that only free whites can be considered citizens of the new United States. Blacks cannot be issued passports for international travel.

Jean Baptiste Pointe du Sable, a black explorer, establishes a settlement at the southern end of Lake Michigan. The settlement becomes the city of Chicago.

1791 Benjamin Banneker publishes his own annual almanac. It remains in publication for more than a decade.

Kentucky is admitted to the union as a slave state.

Slaves on the island of Santa Domingua rise up against the French landowners and overthrow the island government. Toussaint L'Ouverture establishes a new government that rules until an attack by Napoleon I in 1799. It is estimated that there are more than 400,000 freed slaves on the island that is renamed Haiti. Slave trade between the West Indies and the United States is halted, out of fear of importing rebellion into the U.S.

The Expansion of Slavery

1793 Eli Whitney invents the cotton gin. This speeds the cleaning of cotton, and creates a boon in the profitability of cotton. The increase in cotton production makes slave labor extremely cost-effective in the southern states and establishes a strong desire on the part of plantation owners to maintain the right to own slaves.

Laws are passed in the new states that restrict the rights of African Americans. Congress declares in the Fugitive Slave Act that no one may harbor runaway slaves or prevent the capture and arrest of a runaway slave. Virginia does not allow free African Americans into the state.

1796 Tennessee enters the Union as a slave state, but gives free blacks the right to vote.

1798 The Secretary of Navy bans African Americans from serving in the navy.

Benjamin Franklin publishes an address to the public and the Congress that urges abolition of slavery. He is president of The Pennsylvania Society for Promoting the Abolition of Slavery and the Relief of Free Negroes unlawfully held in Bondage.

1799 In his will, George Washington frees his slaves, declaring that his heirs are to provide for those who are too old to take care of themselves and are to educate those young enough to work.

1800 Following a series of smaller rebellions in slave states, the biggest rebellion in the U.S. to date takes place near Richmond, Virginia. More than 1,000 slaves attempt to attack Richmond, but heavy storms destroy the uprising. Thirty-five slaves are hanged for sedition, including the leader Gabriel Prosser.

1801 Congress is petitioned by free African Americans to end slavery in the U.S. Congress votes down the petition.

1803 Louisiana and South Carolina reopen slave trade with the West Indies and Spanish territories, which had been halted following the uprising in Haiti.

Black rioting continues in the United States. African Americans riot for many days in New York following the arrest of several blacks for arson charges. Numerous houses in New York City are burned. Twenty African Americans are convicted on related arson charges.

1804 New Jersey declares slavery abolished.

1807 In England, the Parliament abolishes the slave trade.

1808 The Act to Prohibit the Importation of Slaves of 1807 goes into effect for the entire United States and territories. The act quite specifically forbids anyone bringing people in who are held for service or labor. Despite this law, an estimated 250,000 slaves will be brought in illegally before the Civil War.

1811 On a plantation outside of New Orleans, Charles Deslands, a Haitian freedman, leads a rebellion of more than 400 slaves. The U.S. Army, assisted by local planters, suppresses the uprising. Several dozen, perhaps 100, slaves are killed during the repression of the rebellion.

1812 Louisiana is admitted as the 18th state, as a slave state. The law does recognize free blacks, and allows black men to join the army.

1812–1814 In the War of 1812, several African Americans serve with the armed forces. There are black Americans in all of the sea battles; several serve with distinction. Commander Isaac Chauncey fervently defends the African Americans in his forces to his subordinate Admiral Perry.

1815 Escaped slaves and Native Americans capture Fort Blount in Florida. The fort is used to house escaped slaves. Armed forces attack the fort and reclaim the building, killing several of the rebels.

1819 Alabama joins the Union as a slave state, but allots in the legal system a method to emancipate slaves if the legislature so chooses.

1820 In the Missouri Compromise, the wrangling over the number of free states versus slave states is resolved. Missouri is accepted as a slave state with Maine recognized as a free state. This raises the number of slave and free states to twelve each. From this point forward, the dividing line for slave and free territory is the 36°30′ parallel.

According to the 1820 census, there are an estimated 1,538,000 slaves in the United States and 233,524 free African Americans. The overall population of the United States is 4,896,605. Thirty-one percent of the population are slaves; 5 percent are free blacks.

The American Colonization Society, founded in 1816, sponsors a ship to carry African Americans to Africa. The goal of the ACS is to recolonize Africa with free American blacks. Eighty-six African Americans settle on the territory that becomes Liberia.

1822 Denmark Vesey, a freedman, leads a large group of slaves in an attempted rebellion in Charleston, South Carolina. The estimate is that more than 9,000 slaves are involved. A house slave leaks the information to the owner, and 139 people are arrested, including 4 whites. Vesey and 36 others are hanged for their insurrection plan. This is the largest known rebellion.

1823 The Circuit Court passes two laws affecting the status of slaves: slaves moved to a free state are free; mistreatment of slaves is a indictable offense. State laws are passed, however, that restrict black rights. Mississippi prohibits the teaching of reading and writing skills to African Americans.

1826 The first African American males to graduate from college are John Russwurm from Bowdoin College and Edward A. Jones from Amherst College.

1827 The first newspaper published by an African American is issued in New York City by John Russwurm and Samuel Cornish. The editorial page of Freedom's Journal is dedicated to arguing against slavery and racial discrimination.

New York abolishes slavery, and 10,000 slaves are emancipated.

1829 Cincinnati suffers a race riot where several black residents have their homes burned. More than 1,000 blacks flee the city to live in Canada. Cincinnati's remaining black citizens suffer under the continued strain of white hostility.

1831 Nat Turner, a slave and preacher, leads a band of six slaves on a violent rebellion against slavery. At the end of the three-day uprising, fifty-seven whites, including women and children, are killed. Seventy or more slaves join in the rebellion as they cover Southampton County, Virginia. On August 24 the rioters are met by the militia, and several dozen slaves are killed. Turner flees into Dismal Swamp for several weeks, but is caught and hanged with sixteen other African Americans. The southern states are thrown into panic over this uprising and restrict the movement and rights of assembly of all blacks, free and slave.

A weekly abolitionist newspaper, The Liberator, is published for the first time in Boston, on January 1. Founded by William Garrison, a white man, the paper continues publication until 1865. It is credited with shifting public opinion in the North to total abolition.

The first Convention of the People of Color is held at Wesleyan Church in Philadelphia. Delegates from five states set the agenda for studying various aspects of black life and conditions. They also oppose the American Colonization Society's plan for migration to Africa.

1832 The New England Anti-Slavery Society is founded in Boston by an all-white group. Several other anti-slavery societies will be established by both black and white groups in the next several years.

1833 Oberlin College is founded as an integrated institution. It is the first college in the U.S. to be established as such; other colleges and universities have changed policy to admit blacks. By 1865, the enrollment of Oberlin is 35 percent black.

1834 The British Empire frees all slaves held in its territories. Slave owners are compensated by the British government, resulting in an overall expense to the government of 20 million British pounds. The estimated number of blacks liberated is 700,000.

1836 Congress passes a resolution, supported and promoted by southern state senators, that restricts federal action on state slave laws. Nicknamed the gag rule, the only time allowed for federal control of slavery is during war.

1837 Elijah Lovejoy, publisher of abolitionist literature, is killed at his office in Alton, Illinois, after refusing to give in to a mob's demands that he cease publishing. He is shot while defending his printing press.

Canada gives blacks the right to vote.

1839 Joseph Cinque, an African slave bound for Puerto Principe from Cuba on the Amistad, commandeers a mutiny by the slaves held on board. All but two of the crew are killed, and the two are to sail the ship to Africa. They sail north instead and come ashore on Long Island, NY. The fifty-three slaves are tried and found innocent in 1841 of all charges. They are defended by John Quincy Adams. Cinque returns to Africa after lecturing in the U.S. to raise funds for his passage.

1841 The ship Creole carrying slaves from Virginia to Louisiana is overpowered by the slaves on board, who sail the ship to the Bahamas. In the Bahamas, the slaves are granted their freedom.

Frederick Douglass begins his long and illustrious career as a public lecturer, speaking for the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society.

1842 Rhode Island gives African Americans the right to vote.

An escaped slave, George Latimer, is captured and held on trial for his fugitive status. This marks the beginning of several trial cases to determine the legality of returning African Americans to slavery after they reach a free state. Latimer is purchased from his master by northern abolitionists and set free.

1843 The governing bodies of the states of Massachusetts and Vermont forbid the assistance and abetment of federal officials who capture escaped slaves. This puts the states in direct defiance of the Fugitive Slave Act of 1793.

Sojourner Truth, born Isabella Van Wagener, begins lecturing on religion and emancipation. She was held as a slave for most of her life.

1844 Jim Beckwourth discovers a pass to the Pacific Ocean through the Sierra Nevada mountains. The pass is named for him: Beckwourth Pass.

1845 Texas is admitted to the Union as a slave state despite attempts by northern senators to ban slavery in the new state. The gag rule of 1836 is overturned.

1847 Dred Scott files his initial case in St. Louis for his freedom. The case will not be settled for ten years, but in 1857 the U.S. Supreme Court rules that Scott cannot be free despite his residence in a free state because blacks have no rights "which any white man was bound to respect."

The North Star begins publication. Frederick Douglass' newspaper becomes a forum for abolitionists.

1849 Harriet Tubman, a major force behind the Underground Railroad, escapes from slavery. She will return to the South nineteen times to assist others in their flight to freedom.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court declares in Roberts v. the City of Boston that Benjamin Roberts' daughter is not entitled to attend public schools for white children, despite the lack of schools for African American children. The case establishes the legislation that recognizes "separate but equal"as constitutional until Brown v. the Board of Education in 1954.

The Breakdown of Slavery and the Civil War

1850 The Compromise of 1850 establishes several regulations on slavery after the Mexican War. California becomes a free state and Washington, D.C., abolishes slavery. New Mexico and Utah are not voted either slave or free; Texas is a slave state. The most damaging element of the Compromise is the Fugitive Slave Act, which toughens the regulations freeing escaped slaves. A bounty is paid to federal officers for returned slaves.

1852 Uncle Tom's Cabin by Harriet Beecher Stowe is published for the first time. It sells 300,000 copies in the first year. The story is about a generous slave who is held by Simon Legree, a brutal owner who eventually flogs Tom to death. The story fuels anti-slavery sentiment.

Frederick Douglass delivers a scathing public lecture entitled "What to the Slaves is the Fourth of July?" Douglass attacks the celebration for its injustice to those held in bondage. He ends the speech by saying "for revolting barbarity and shameless hypocrisy, America reigns without a rival."

1853 Ashmond Institute in Oxford, Pennsylvania, is the first black college in the U.S. It is eventually renamed Lincoln University.

William Wells Brown, the first African American to publish a novel, has Clotel published in England after all American publishers reject the manuscript. Brown has a book of poetry successfully published in 1851, called The Anti-Slavery Harp.

1854 Escaped slave Anthony Burns is returned to his slave owners in Virginia after capture in Boston. He is paraded through the streets by federal law enforcement officials before his return. Despite attempts by abolitionists to buy his freedom, his owner refuses to relinquish custody of him.

The Kansas–Nebraska Act allows both states to enter the union without slavery restrictions, violating the Missouri Compromise of 1850. Stephen Douglas is the sponsor of the act. Abraham Lincoln denounces the act in one of his first public addresses directed beyond his home state of Illinois.

1855 Two more states, Michigan and Maine, forbid the assistance of federal officials enforcing the Fugitive Slave Act. Massachusetts also desegregates the public school system without incident.

1856 Violence erupts over abolitionist sentiment in three places. The town of Lawrence, Kansas, has five pro-slavery settlers killed by abolitionists. John Brown is blamed. Osawatomie, Kansas, is raided by 300 pro-slavery men in retaliation. Osawatomie is John Brown's home. Brown, an anti-slavery activist has moved to Kansas to protest the slavery status of the territory. In Washington, D.C., Senator Charles Sumner of Massachusetts is beaten unconscious by representative Preston Brooks of South Carolina. Brooks objected to Sumner's abolitionist views.

1857 The Dred Scott decision is issued by the U.S. Supreme Court. The decision strengthens anti-slavery sentiment in the North, when the Court declares that Congress cannot restrict slavery in the territories. Scott, who had resided in free Illinois and the free territory of Wisconsin, sued for his freedom because of his residency in a free area. The Court declares that he is property of his owner and cannot be taken away by the court. He is freed by his owner, nonetheless.

Maine and New Hampshire grant citizenship to African Americans.

1858 Lincoln and Douglas debate, following Lincoln's proclamation at his nomination that "a house divided . . . cannot stand . . . permanently half slave and half free." Lincoln does not call for the freeing of African Americans, although he does personally oppose slavery.

1859 John Brown, a folk hero to the abolitionists, attacks Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, with a band of thirteen whites and five blacks. They attempt to seize the arsenal to gain ammunition for a black uprising. Brown is hanged for treason. He predicts on the gallows that bloodshed will resolve the slave issue.

1860 Abraham Lincoln is elected the sixteenth president of the United States. One month after the election, and three months before Lincoln's swearing-in, South Carolina secedes from the Union.

According to the 1860 census, there are 3,953,760 slaves in the U.S. They are almost evenly divided between male and female. The 488,070 free African Americans that are counted make up less than two percent of the population; slaves are 12 percent.

1861 Mississippi, Florida, and Alabama secede by January 11. Georgia, Louisiana, and Texas secede by the beginning of February. In March, President Lincoln is sworn in to office, and the South establishes the Constitution of the Confederacy. April 12 marks the official beginning of the Civil War with the attack by Confederate troops on Fort Sumter. Blacks are not accepted as enlisted men in the Union Army by most of the commanding officers.

1862 Robert Smalls sneaks aboard the Confederate gunboat, the Planter, and pilots it to Union officers. Smalls, his family, and the other escaped slaves who command the boat are freed for their heroism.

Congress allows black soldiers in the Union Army. Until now, they were only to be used as hired hands and paid laborers at $10 a day, minus expenses. Soldiers are paid $13 a day plus a clothing allowance. Once blacks are enlisted, though, they do not receive soldiers' pay. The Confederacy also declares that all captured soldiers will be sold as slaves or hanged; any officer commanding black troops will be executed. Through the duration of the war, no black prisoners of war are given in exchange by the South.

1863 President Lincoln declares on January 1 that all slaves in the Confederate states are hereafter free. In the Emancipation Proclamation, Lincoln does not free the slaves in territories that do not participate in the southern rebellion. The effectiveness of the proclamation depends on the Union Army winning.

The 54th Massachusetts Volunteers are the first black soldiers enlisted in the North. Frederick Douglass, Martin Delaney, and other voices of the abolition movement recruit for the 54th. The 54th fights in several battles but the most decisive in proving their honor is at Fort Wagner, South Carolina. Sergeant William Carney receives the Congressional Medal of Honor thirty-seven years after the war.

The first major battle to use black troops is at Milliken's Bend in Louisiana. The bravery of the black soldiers shifts the sentiment of some officers previously opposed to arming blacks.

1864 Thirty-eight black regiments participate in the two-month siege at Petersburg, Virginia. The disastrous attack on July 30 leaves Union troops open to attack by the Confederacy. Confederate policy is to capture white soldiers and kill all black soldiers. Hundreds of black soldiers are clubbed and bayoneted while trying to surrender.

Grant declares an end to the prisoner exchange until the South agrees to release black soldiers as well as white. The South refuses, and the lack of returned Confederate soldiers taxes southern troops, already weakened by continued losses in battle. The Confederacy prisoner-of-war camps become hellholes of overcrowded, unsanitary, disease ridden death camps.

Congress passes a bill equalizing pay, clothing supplements, and equipment for black soldiers. The Fugitive Slave Act is repealed.

1865 By the end of the Civil War 178,975 black soldiers enlist in the Union Army. More than 68,000 die, and 23 win the Congressional Medal of Honor. One hundred sixty-six regiments in the Union Army are black. Because of the lower pay, the lack of clothing money, and reticence of white doctors to treat the soldiers during most of the war, black soldiers have double the mortality rate from disease compared to the white soldiers.

Congress passes the Thirteenth Amendment, abolishing slavery in the United States. All Confederate states wishing to reenter the Union must illegalize slavery. South Carolina is the first to do so.

The Freedmen's Bureau is created by Congress to help emancipated slaves make the transition to independence and freedom. Southern states pass several laws that restrict black rights and freedom. The Ku Klux Klan is formed to promote white supremacy.

1866 The first blacks to be elected to public office in the United States are Edward Walker and Charles Mitchell, as representatives in Massachusetts.

Fisk University is founded.

The Civil Rights Act of 1866 is passed over a veto by President Johnson, nullifying southern codes and laws repressing black rights and granting citizenship to African Americans.

1867 The Reconstruction Act, overriding another presidential veto, declares that all states wishing to reenter the Union submit to military control and reorganization of the state government. The state must also pass the pending Fourteenth Amendment and grant the right to vote to all African Americans age 21 and older. Enforcement of the Reconstruction Act gives blacks the majority in several states.

1868 The Fourteenth Amendment passes Congress, defining citizenship and granting federal oversight of all state rulings involving constitutional rights of individuals. This allows federal intervention on racial issues, where black rights may be violated by state governments.

Oscar Dunn is elected Lieutenant Governor of Louisiana. Dunn is a freed slave who fought in the Union Army.

1870 The Fifteenth Amendment establishes the right to vote of all citizens, specifically banning any possible restriction of voting rights on the basis "of race, color, or previous servitude."

Hiram Revel is elected by Mississippi as the first black senator. Joseph Rainey of South Carolina and Jefferson Long of Georgia are elected as Representatives to the U.S. Congress.

1871 The terrorist tactics of the Ku Klux Klan for intimidating blacks reaches a level that Congress decides requires federal intervention. The Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871 illegalizes the activity of any organization that is deemed to deprive any citizen of his constitutional rights. It also forbids the hindrance of executing any law of the land. This is enacted to combat the Klan's attempts to prevent blacks from voting, running for office, or engaging in other legal activity.

Robert Elliot (South Carolina), Robert DeLarge (South Carolina), Benjamin Tumer (Alabama), and Josieh

Walls (Florida) are elected as Representatives to Congress.

1873 Richard Cane of South Carolina and John Lynch of Mississippi are elected to the House of Representatives. Cane will serve two non-consecutive terms; Lynch will serve three terms. James Rapier (Alabama) and Alonzo Ransier (South Carolina) are also elected as representatives.

1875 The Civil Rights Act of 1875 bans discrimination in public places and illegalizes discriminatory accommodations. This functionally bans segregated hotels, inns, theaters, and other public gathering areas.

Blanche Bruce of Mississippi is elected to the Senate. He will be the last black senator until 1967. Thirty-two representatives will serve in the House between 1870 and 1970. During that one hundred–year period, there will only be 28 scattered years that do not have at least one black voice in the Congress. The longest period without a black representative is between 1901 and 1929.

1879 A number of African Americans begin a migration to northern states. With the continued discrimination and violence against blacks in the southern states, and the lack of job opportunities, the North is seen as a better place to live. Large cities also attract African Americans because of the increased likelihood of finding work. By 1910, more than a quarter of the black population will live in cities; before 1880, 90 percent of the black population lived in rural areas.

The Stagnation of Civil Rights

1881 "Jim Crow" laws, segregating blacks and whites in public facilities and accommodations, are passed in Tennessee, violating the Civil Rights Act of 1875.

1883 The Civil Rights Act of 1875 is overturned by the Supreme Court, leaving the path open for "Jim Crow" laws to be established in state legislatures. Florida, Mississippi, Texas, and Louisiana all establish segregation laws by 1890.

1884 The first African American baseball teams are formed with the increased pressure for segregated teams. Although there are still a few black players on white professional teams until 1900, the trend is rapid to keep baseball teams exclusively white.

1885 Michigan establishes anti-segregation laws that protect integration of public establishments and accommodations. Seventeen states, mainly in the North, have similar laws established by 1910.

1887 The first baseball franchise for African Americans is founded: the Union Giants.

1889 Frederick Douglass is appointed as ambassador to Haiti.

1890 Mississippi is the first state to establish rules that restrict who can vote. The rules, instituting literacy tests and such, are designed to eliminate black voters from registration. Most of the southern states follow suit.

The boll weevil migrates to the United States from Mexico and proceeds to devastate cotton crops. With 3 million bales of cotton destroyed each year, the cotton industry is forced to respond by laying off workers. This increases African American migration to enormous levels. In 1915 alone, a quarter million blacks will relocate from the South to the North.

1896 Plessy v. Ferguson is the first Supreme Court ruling to follow the "separate but equal" doctrine that remains the rule of the land until Brown v. the Board of Education in 1954. This follows on the 1849 ruling in Massachusetts. In the dissenting opinion written by Justice Harlan, he states, "If a white man and a black man choose to occupy the same public conveyance on a public highway, it is their right to do so, and no government, proceeding alone on grounds of race, can prevent it without infringing the personal liberty of each."

1898 When some of the literacy tests designed to keep blacks from voting are found to also keep whites from voting, Louisiana enacts the Grandfather Clause. This law, used to circumvent federal law forbidding racially motivated voting rules, declares that anyone who had a father or grandfather registered to vote in 1867 can vote. Louisiana had few registered black voters in 1867, and thus 123,000 blacks lose their right to vote because of the law. Other southern states follow with similar laws.

In the Spanish-American War, 100 blacks achieve officer ranking in the U.S. military. Five receive Congressional Medals of Honor.

1901 One month after being sworn in as president, Theodore Roosevelt invites Booker T. Washington to dinner at the White House. Reaction in the South is hostile to Roosevelt because of this social association with a black man.

1907 Rioting in Brownsville, Texas, leaves one dead and several injured, as well as vast property damage. Soldiers from the 25th Infantry are believed responsible. Several black soldiers are involved, and President Roosevelt discharges 167 black soldiers and bars them from reenlistment because of the incident. The decision is reversed in 1972 when only one of the dishonorably discharged soldiers is still alive to receive compensation.

1909 The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) is founded in New York. It is the 100th anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. The organization works to reverse discriminatory laws and offer legal assistance to blacks unconstitutionally imprisoned.

1910 Thirty of the 48 states have laws illegalizing interracial marriage. Five states had such laws but reversed them before the turn of the century. Seven states (Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, New Mexico, Rhode Island) are the only states to never have segregated schools. They all establish laws to illegalize them, nonetheless. Another seven states which do have segregated schools pass laws illegalizing segregation.

1911 The National Urban League is founded. The main purpose of the organization is to raise the educational and employment opportunities of African Americans.

1915 The NAACP sponsors lawyers to challenge the government before the Supreme Court in Guinn v. United States. The case attacked the Grandfather Clause voting laws in Oklahoma. The Supreme Court rules against the Oklahoma laws, stating that they are instituted to specifically circumvent the 15th Amendment.

1917 The NAACP sponsors a challenge to a St. Louis, Missouri, regulation that bars blacks from buying homes in predominantly white neighborhoods, and whites from buying in black neighborhoods. In Buchanan v. Warley the regulation is struck down by the Supreme Court as a violation of the 14th Amendment.

World War One begins, and 600 African Americans are commissioned as officers through a black officers' training camp. Black soldiers will make up more than 10 percent of the fighting troops. Two black battalions receive the Croix de Guerre and two officers receive awards for bravery.

1918 The NAACP commences a strong public campaign to make lynchings illegal under federal law. They publish a booklet, Thirty Years of Lynching in the United States, 1889–1918 with detailed case histories of 100 actual lynchings. They assemble statistics on lynchings in the U.S. and push for legislation combatting such attacks.

1919 Some states try to pass legislation that declares membership in the NAACP illegal. Rioting over racial discrimination and lynching swells to epidemic proportions throughout the U.S.

1920 The Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill is voted down in the Senate, although it is passed in the House of Representatives. No subsequent bill on anti-lynching is approved by Congress either. Several states pass or strengthen their anti-Klan and anti-lynching legislation, including Illinois, Kentucky, and Louisiana. Several Supreme Court decisions are passed during the 1920s and 30s to defend black rights in juried trials, both for treatment of the accused and the rights for blacks to sit on juries.

1924 As immigration laws tighten with the closing of Ellis Island, one of the restrictions is that no immigrants from Africa will be accepted.

The Grassroots of Civil Rights

1926 Negro History Week is declared for the first time by The Association for the Study of Negro Life and History.

1927 Following on some of the southern boycotts of segregated transportation systems, Chicago blacks and the Urban League organize a boycott of stores that hire only white employees. This leads to other cities boycotting against discriminatory practices in their towns as well.

1930 The NAACP, now with more than 100,000 members, has the political clout to prevent the confirmation of a racist nominee for the Supreme Court. It also assists in the defeat of some congressmen who voted to confirm the judge.

1933 Franklin D. Roosevelt is president, and the country is in the midst of the worst depression in U.S. history. A disproportionate number of blacks are on government assistance.

1935 The NAACP loses a major decision in the Supreme Court. In Grovey v. Townsend, the Court reverses a previous stand over the exclusion of blacks from voting in primaries. The Court finds that the Democratic Party in Texas is a voluntary political association, entitled to admit or refuse anyone they choose.

1936 Jesse Owens competes in the Olympics in Germany and wins four gold medals. This humiliates the German team and the German Chancellor, Adolph Hitler, who have sought to prove racial superiority of whites in athletic competition.

1938 Thurgood Marshall is appointed as chief counsel of the NAACP.

1939 Marion Anderson is barred from singing in Constitution Hall in Washington, D.C., by the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR). She sings instead on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial. The president's wife, Eleanor Roosevelt, appalled by the DAR's actions, resigns from the organization.

1940 The first African American to achieve the rank of general is Benjamin Oliver Davis, awarded the post of Brigadier General. As the country prepares for war, Roosevelt allows black enlistment in the armed forces to be expanded. During the presidential campaign of 1940, both the democratic and republican platforms include promises to equalize economic standards and political involvement of blacks and whites.

1941 Roosevelt issues an executive order banning segregation in defense industries and establishing a committee on Fair Employment Practice. Roosevelt came out strongly against segregation in a memo preceding his order, declaring that we need "to strengthen our unity and morale by refuting at home the very theories which we are fighting abroad."

When the Japanese attack Pearl Harbor, Messman Dorie Miller volunteers to man a machine gun on his ship and downs four enemy planes. He is awarded the Navy Cross for valor.

1942 The Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) is founded in Chicago. The organization is dedicated to peaceful, active promotion of black rights.

1943 CORE stages a sit-in at a Chicago restaurant that does not serve blacks.

Race riots break out in major cities. In Detroit, 34 people are killed during one uprising, and federal troops have to be called in.

The 761st tank battalion fights at Omaha Beach on D-Day, along with several hundred other black regiments. The 761st is awarded for courage.

1945 One million African Americans serve with the American Armed Forces.

Morgan v. Virginia decides in the Supreme Court that integration of interstate busses is the only way to prevent unnecessary discriminatory practices when transport moves from largely white populations into more integrated states. Although this does not declare the concept of separate facilities illegal, it does support that accommodations must be essentially equal, and when that cannot be achieved, integrated services must be established. The NAACP's lawyer, Thurgood Marshall, argues the case before the Court.

1946 Ralph Bunche is appointed to a trusteeship in the United Nations, which he helped to organize.

1947 President Harry Truman's committee on civil rights issues their report on racial injustice, "To Secure These Rights." Truman, in speaking before the NAACP on discrimination and racism, says, "We cannot wait another decade or another generation to remedy these evils. We must work, as never before, to cure them now."

CORE sponsors the first of the "Freedom Rides" to protest segregated local transportation facilities in the south.

Jackie Robinson becomes the first black baseball player in the major leagues. He plays for the Brooklyn Dodgers. Two years later, Robinson is voted Most Valuable Player for the National League.

1948 President Truman integrates the U.S. Armed Forces. By executive order, Truman bans all forms of military segregation and assigns an advisory committee to oversee all regulations to ensure fair practice.

U.N. diplomat Ralph Bunche is appointed as mediator in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

1949 Decisions by the federal courts further erode segregation on public transportation. In Whiteside v. Southern Bus Lines and Lee v. Commonwealth of Virginia the courts declare that companies cannot impose segregated seating in states that do not have segregation laws.

In the House of Representatives, William Dawson (Illinois) becomes the first African American to chair a committee: Expenditures Committee.

Atlanta, Georgia, has the first African American–owned radio station.

1950 Ralph Bunche is the first black to be awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. Bunche is honored for his role as mediator in the Arab–Israeli War.

Gwendolyn Brooks, a poet, is awarded a Pulitzer Prize. She is the first African American honored by a Pulitzer award.

Truman's advisory committee for the armed forces integration process issues its first report. The special forces and some training programs remain segregated despite the executive order to integrate. However, the majority of the military has complied with desegregation.

1951 The National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses votes to disband after they announce they have achieved their goal of integrating the nursing profession. Mabel Keaton Staupers wins the Spingarn Award for her efforts in leading the NACGN to its goal.

One of the NAACP's district leaders, Harry Moore, is killed by a bomb at his home in Florida on Christmas night.

1952 The Tuskegee Institute, which has been filing statistics on lynching since 1881, announces that this is the first year in their history with no lynchings.

Thurgood Marshall, arguing for the NAACP, presents evidence to the Supreme Court for striking down Plessy v Ferguson and stating that separate, segregated institutions can never be equal. The District of Columbia, Delaware, Kansas, South Carolina, and Virginia all have cases before the court that challenge the "separate but equal" rule. The black schools are deemed to be relatively equal in caliber to the white schools, but still discriminatory. The Court requests further information, and a team of 100 lawyers for the NAACP proceed to gather information for two years to fulfill the request.

The March of Civil Rights

1954 Under the stewardship of Chief Justice Earl Warren, a unanimous decision is handed down by the Supreme Court on "separate but equal" educational facilities. In the case entitled Brown v. the Board of Education, the Court decides on five cases dealing with segregated schools. The Court holds that separate is inherently unequal and therefore schools have to be integrated to comply with federal law. The ruling technically only affects schools from the four states and the District of Columbia which are involved in the suits. Other schools battling integration need to be successfully sued before integration becomes a general part of the land. The White Citizens Council is formed in the South to battle against integrated schools. Some southern states pass various resolutions to circumvent integration of their public schools.

1955 Ralph Bunche is appointed undersecretary to the United Nations.

Rosa Parks refuses to move to the back of the bus in Montgomery, Alabama. She is arrested for noncompliance of the segregation laws. The Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., uses this incident to arrange a boycott of the buses in Montgomery by African Americans and sympathetic whites.

Marion Anderson is the first African American to sing with the Metropolitan Opera Company.

1956 Eight states have completely ignored the integration laws of schools, including Alabama and Mississippi. A court order forces the University of Alabama to enroll Autherine Lucy, but she is almost immediately expelled on a technicality. Rioting accompanies her short attendance at the university.

The Supreme Court declares bus segregation unconstitutional. Buses cannot have separate seating assignments for blacks and whites. This ends the Montgomery boycott which has lasted over a year.

In several cases, the Supreme Court continues to strike down segregation laws. The cases involve segregation on beaches, in swimming pools, public parks, and recreational facilities, and in every instance the Court declares that they must, by law, be integrated facilities.

1957 President Dwight D. Eisenhower proposes and Congress passes the Civil Rights Act of 1957, the first major civil rights act of this century. The Act establishes a Commission on Civil Rights that will oversee the adherence to any and all regulations integrating facilities and schools, allowing blacks to vote, and allowing blacks on juries. It also establishes the right to fine or jail anyone who acts in contempt of these laws.

By Executive Order, President Eisenhower ends segregation at Little Rock's Central High School in Arkansas. Federal troops are assigned to line the streets to assist 18 African American high school students to attend school without being harmed.

Mississippi only has 3 percent of its black citizens registered to vote.

1958 The Youth Council of the NAACP begins a series of sit-ins at segregated restaurants and lunch counters.

1959 Prince Edward County in Virginia votes to abolish the school system rather than give in to integration.

1960 The Civil Rights Act of 1960 increases the ability of the government to punish anyone interfering with the civil rights of another or attempting to avoid prosecution. It establishes as a federal crime acts of obstructing the law, interfering with enforcement of a federal or court order, fleeing across state lines to avoid prosecution, and destroying election documents and ballots. It also places a five year prison sentence on anyone possessing explosives with intent to do personal or property damage, and a minimum sentence of ten years on anyone actually committing such an act.

Greensboro, North Carolina, has one of the most publicized sit-ins at a Woolworths' lunch counter. Four blacks sit at a whites only counter and refuse to move. Cameras film the hostilities this incident triggers. Other sit-ins follow at Nashville and Montgomery, and eventually spread to many major cities. Dozens of people are arrested at the sit-ins for violation of local segregation laws. In response to this passive resistance, several cities begin integrating facilities.

1961 CORE sponsors a freedom ride through southern states to check state compliance with desegregation orders, following the 1949 and 1956 rulings of the Supreme Court barring segregation on public transportation. Along with finding noncompliance in many southern states, the riders are arrested in several places, and meet with violent crowds in others. The tension and violence require the federal government to send federal marshals to maintain the peace in Montgomery, Alabama. By 1963 more than 70,000 people will have participated in various freedom rides in the U.S.

President John F. Kennedy appoints several African Americans to posts in his administration. He has a greater percentage of African Americans on his staff than anyone in U.S. history. Kennedy appoints Thurgood Marshall as a U.S. Appeals Court Judge.

Several states legislate against integrated public housing.

President Kennedy issues an Executive Order that forms the Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. Under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labor, the secretary of labor enforces the implementation of equal employment practices.

1962 President Kennedy issues an Executive Order that bars any racially motivated discrimination in public housing, housing financed by federal grants or loans, or in housing owned or operated by the government.

James Meredith is accepted to the University of Mississippi on court order, and 12,000 federal troops are assigned to the campus to maintain order during the rioting that follows. In Meredith's first attempts to register for classes, Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett personally blocks his entrance. Two people are killed during the civil disturbance of whites protesting the integration of the university.

1963 World War II veteran and NAACP regional representative Medgar Evers is shot in the back and killed at his home a few hours after President Kennedy gives a television address on the importance of civil rights. He is buried with honors at Arlington National Cemetery.

Four children, all African American, are killed by a bomb blast in a church in Birmingham, Alabama. Segregationists are believed to be responsible. Riots follow.

Martin Luther King, Jr., is arrested in Birmingham, Alabama, during one of the many confrontations between black protestors and police. Several African Americans are injured by fire hoses, attack dogs, and clubs wielded by the Birmingham police. Thousands of people participate in the protests, and thousands more watch the attack on the protestors on television. King issues a letter in response to those who accuse him of instigating violence. The letter is smuggled from the jail. He is released shortly thereafter.

The March on Washington is the largest civil rights rally in history. Two hundred fifty thousand people march to the Lincoln Memorial to hear several speakers, including the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr. King's speech, "I Have a Dream," is a plea for equality and brotherhood between blacks and whites. It becomes one of the most quoted orations in U.S. history. The March is a culmination of CORE and NAACP efforts to publicize racism in the country.

President Kennedy is assassinated. Lyndon Johnson is sworn is as the new president.

1964 President Johnson signs the Civil Rights Act of 1964 into law. Initiated under the Kennedy Administration, the Act is the broadest legislation in support of civil rights since the Civil War. It affects legislation for voting, accommodations, schools, employment, federal aid, and treatment of civil rights cases in the courts. Southern congressmen try filibustering to avoid passing the legislation, but they are voted down by congressmen supporting the Act.

Martin Luther King, Jr., is awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his work in civil rights in the United States.

Three civil rights workers are killed in Mississippi. Local law enforcement officials are suspected of assisting in their deaths, but charges are dismissed.

The first of the large-scale big city riots occurs in New York City, in Harlem. One person is killed and more than 100 people are injured during the melee.

In Griffin v. School Board of Prince Edward County, the Supreme Court orders the Virginia county schools to reopen their doors after closing them in 1959 to avoid integration. The court declares that as long as any public school system in Virginia remains open, Prince Edward County must also remain open. The county had been collecting funds from taxpayers to pay for private school tuition only for white children, saying that no private schools existed for black children, so payment was not necessary to blacks.

Malcolm X establishes the Organization for Afro-American Unity.

1965 Malcolm X is assassinated while speaking at a public rally.

Martin Luther King, Jr., leads a march from Selma, Alabama, to the state capital, Montgomery. The marchers first attempt the five-day walk on March 7, but they are attacked by police—under the order of Governor George Wallace—using whips, clubs, and tear gas. Almost 100 people are injured; several are hospitalized. Television captures the brutality of the police action. Another attempt is made on March 9, which is again met by force, but without violent incident. On March 21, under federal order of police protection and a court injunction against disrupting the marchers, 2,100 people set out from Selma. Three hundred marchers are allowed along the path, but 25,000 walk up to the capital building in Montgomery on March 25. One white woman is killed during the walk, by Klan members. 4,000 troops protect the marchers.

CORE sponsors a major protest at Bogalusa, Louisiana. During the several days of protest, there is considerable confrontation, and one man is shot and wounded. The local officials ignore a Justice Department order to protect the protestors, and criminal charges are filed against the Bogalusa officials.

President Johnson signs into law the 1965 Voting Rights Act. The Act responds to African American protests over voting restrictions in southern states. It bans literacy, knowledge, and character tests for voters. It eliminates poll taxes, used to keep the poor from voting. It adds federal support to protecting the Fifteenth Amendment.

The Watts district in Los Angeles suffers, during a hot August, from the most extensive racial riots to date. Several thousand people are arrested during the six-day melee, and 35 are killed. Several blocks are looted and burned in the black neighborhood, resulting in millions of dollars in losses and damage to property. President Johnson vehemently condemns the rioters.

1966 James Meredith, who broke the color barrier at the University of Mississippi in 1962, is shot in the back during a 200-mile march to promote voter registration among the African American population. He is shot in Hernando, Mississippi, sustaining serious injury, but survives. After the march political activist Stokely Carmichael uses the term "black power" in discussing motivation for the marchers. Carmichael is head of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee and advocates a more militant role for black activists.

CORE votes to endorse and the NAACP votes to reject the concept of "Black Power."

Riots break out in Chicago, Cleveland, and other cities across the U.S. In one of the many marches in Chicago, Martin Luther King, Jr., is stoned by angry crowds objecting to integration of the white neighborhoods on the city's southwest side.

The Black Panthers are founded in California by Huey Newton and Bobby Seale. They issue the organization's ten-point Manifesto, outlining the goals of the Panthers.

Years of Turmoil

1967 Representative Adam Clayton Powell is dismissed from serving in Congress because of charges of misappropriation of public funds. He takes his case to the District Court, and wins reelection during the review process but is not allowed to take his seat in Congress. Powell has been in office since 1945.

Thurgood Marshall is appointed by President Johnson to the U.S. Supreme Court. He is the first African American to sit on the Court.

Riots occur throughout the country during the summer. Riots in Boston, Tampa, and Cincinnati during June are broken up by National Guardsmen. By the end of June major riots take place in Newark, Detroit, and Buffalo. The most violent of the race riots is in Detroit. Forty-three people are killed and several blocks in the city are completely destroyed by arson and looting. Much of the massive physical devastation to the city remains unrepaired 25 years later. The National Guards take over the streets in tanks to quell the rioting. Curfews are imposed, and President Johnson establishes the Kerner advisory commission to investigate the causes of such violent rioting.

The NAACP holds its annual convention, but the meeting is divisive. Members defending the recent outburst of militant black groups are attacked for alienating white supporters of civil rights. Several leaders of the more militant civil rights groups meet in Newark and call for a separate black nation.

The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee publishes an article attacking Israel, charging that Zionists are discriminating against the Arab population. Jewish supporters and members of the SNCC resign in protest.

President Johnson nominates Walter Washington to be mayor of Washington, D.C., in the reorganized city government. Washington becomes the first African American to govern a major U.S. city.

1968 The Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., is assassinated in Memphis by a lone gunman. During the rioting that follows in most of the major cities, 38 people are killed.

The Kerner Commission issues its findings for President Johnson on the riots. It charges that racism against African Americans is the major cause of unrest and dissatisfaction among the black community. The continued pressure on the black community includes poverty and discrimination. Any effort to dispel the problems should include increased educational, employment, and housing opportunities for blacks. In response to the findings of the commission and to the death of Reverend King, Congress passes the Civil Rights Bill of 1968. This opens up housing to complete integration.

In demonstrations designed to draw attention to the plight of the poor, a march of welfare mothers, led by Coretta Scott King, travels through 20 cities. In Washington, D.C., a shantytown is built, and 2,500 people live in the ramshackle homes on the Mall to persuade Congress to reform funding for housing and welfare programs.

Riots take place in Cleveland, where black mayor Carl Stokes holds office, and in Miami. Eleven are killed in Cleveland and 3 in Miami. In Brooklyn, white militants attack a group of blacks, reputed to be with the Black Panthers, and white supporters, in the Criminal Court building. The attackers use blackjacks to violently harm the crowd.

Huey Newton is convicted on manslaughter charges, stemming from the shooting death of an Oakland, California, police officer. The conviction is overturned on technical grounds by the California Court of Appeals. Other Black Panthers are in exile avoiding prosecution or are under arrest for violent attacks. Three Panthers are arrested for the machine gun attack on a Newark police station.

1969 James Earl Ray pleads guilty to the charge of first-degree murder of Martin Luther King, Jr. He is sentenced to life in prison.

During the Chicago trial of eight Black Panthers accused of conspiracy to incite a riot during the Democratic Convention of 1968, Bobby Seale is ordered gagged and bound by the trial judge. Seale is given four years for contempt of court after further disturbances during the trial.

Representative Powell is reinstated by the Congress to his seat. He is fined for misuse of public funds and is stripped of his seniority status.

1970 Some local public school systems decide to honor the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr., by either closing or by holding special classes about the work of King.

Several school systems are forced by state and federal Supreme Court decisions to instigate integration into the public school system immediately. This includes school districts in Memphis, Denver, several in Louisiana, and elsewhere around the country. Many of the efforts to integrate are met with violence and property destruction by whites opposing integration and bussing. Congress passes an amendment that denies federal funds to any school district that does not comply with the integration guidelines.

Confrontational demonstrations and gatherings are becoming increasingly violent in the nation. In Augusta, Georgia, six African Americans are killed by gunfire; several are shot from behind. In a campus uprising at Jackson State College in Mississippi, two students are killed in a residence hall by police. One of the most dramatic incidents is the shooting death of a judge during a trial in San Rafael, California. Three prisoners and the escape van driver are killed by police. The guns are traced to Angela Davis, who goes into hiding after the shootout.

1971 Prisoners, mostly black, riot at Attica State Prison in New York. Conditions are cramped in the prison, and black prisoners charge that white guards are excessively abusive. The takeover lasts four days and is broken up by state troopers storming the facilities. Eleven guards and 32 prisoners are killed in the uprising.

The government Commission on Civil Rights finds in its report that the justice department is not adequately supporting the standing civil rights legislation.

1973 In a major victory for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), AT&T is forced to pay $15 million in back wages to 15,000 minority men and women who are employed by AT&T. They are also charged with equalizing pay scales between black and white employees and promoting minorities to balance staff.

1977 Karen Farmer is the first African American accepted to the Daughters of the American Revolution, an organization that once forbid the performance of Marion Anderson because she was black.

1978 Benjamin Hooks becomes the new director of the NAACP, and his first action is to restructure the organization with more local chapters and more emphasis on fundraising to increase NAACP activities.

In a ruling by the Supreme Court, Alan Bakke wins his argument against the University of California, Davis, that the system of minority quotas is inherently discriminatory against individual applicants. The concept of reverse discrimination is established, where whites are discriminated against if blacks with lesser test scores or academic ability are given positions over the white applicant.

1980 Rioting results in Miami after a jury acquits four white police officers in the beating death of a black man held in custody by the police. Nine people are killed and more than 100 are injured during the uprising.

The Supreme Court rules that intentional discrimination must be proved in order to substantiate violation of the law. Any law that by design, but not by purpose, discriminates is not a legal violation. The case stems from the voting system in Mobile, Alabama, which has a voting system that dilutes the black voting power base. This is the first in a series of Supreme Court decisions that weakens the ability of minorities to sue for discrimination. In another decision, however, the Supreme Court upholds the legality of federal set-asides for minority contractors, allowing 10 percent of contracts to be restricted to minority owned companies.

The Justice Department, in enforcing the Civil Rights Act of 1964, establishes revised hiring standards to increase minority employment in the police department of Cincinnati, the fire department in Chicago, and the police department in New York City.

In one of his last actions in office, President Jimmy Carter vetos legislation that bans federal action to order busing to integrate schools. The bill, if passed, would have forbidden the government to use federal funding to prosecute or investigate noncompliance with busing for integration.

1981 President Reagan's appointment to the post of attorney general, William French Smith, declares publicly that the Justice Department will no longer involve itself in desegregation cases of public schools where busing is advised. It will also no longer pursue enforcement of racial hiring quotas and affirmative action plans. Reagan takes further action by reducing the Justice Department's ability to enforce Civil Rights legislation on discriminatory practices.

1982 Clarence Thomas is nominated for the chairmanship of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, after President Reagan withdraws his original nominee because of heavy protest from civil rights groups.

The Senate passes an anti-busing bill despite efforts by liberal Democrats to stall action on the bill. The Congress also passes the renewal of the Civil Rights Act of 1965, despite conservative Republican efforts to block the vote.

1983 The Supreme Court rules that discriminatory private schools cannot hold the status for tax-exemption. The Reagan Administration supported tax-exemption status for schools that do not practice integration.

A report issued by the Center for the Study of Social Policies states that African American family incomes have not improved at all since 1960 and that the gap between minority and white earnings is still great.

President Reagan reverses his initial position and signs into law the national holiday for Martin Luther King, Jr.

Jesse Jackson, founder of PUSH, declares his candidacy for the presidency.

1984 Acting independently of the Reagan Administration, Jesse Jackson obtains the release of navy officer Robert Goodman, who had been held by Syrian captors.

Jesse Jackson becomes the first black candidate in a presidential primary to win the majority vote in any state. The District of Columbia and Louisiana both turn out a record number of black voters in support of Jackson.

1986 The Supreme Court, in separate rulings, declares that affirmative action plans do not affect seniority when laying off workers, even if earlier hiring patterns were discriminatory. They also allow Norfolk, Virginia, school systems to ban busing for integration, because it is suspected that busing will only lead to whites moving away from the city. The Court does uphold the use of affirmative action plans, despite strong Reagan Administration objections to such plans.

In an incident that triggers widespread accusations of racism, Michael Griffith is beaten to death by an angry white mob in Howard Beach, Queens, New York, after his car breaks down in the white neighborhood. His companions are beaten but manage to escape.

The director of Federal Contract Compliance in the Department of Labor resigns in protest over the Reagan Administration's record of nonenforcement of affirmative action laws.

1987 In a narrow, 5–4 margin, the Supreme Court upholds hiring quotas to remedy past racially discriminatory practices. The Alabama state police are ordered to continue hiring black officers for 50 percent of the new positions. The Reagan Administration fought to reverse the hiring quota.

1988 In his second run for the Democratic nomination for the presidency, Jesse Jackson wins the majority of delegates in several states. He is in second place for the nomination halfway through the primaries and finishes a strong third at the end of the primaries, demonstrating the ability of an African American to be a major political candidate.

1989 The Supreme Court rules that minority quota set-asides that involve government contracts can only be required in response to specific previous discrimination. They cannot be used as general policy. They also rule, in separate cases, that the burden of proving racial discrimination lays on the employee, and that accidental discrimination is not ground for suit. In Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, the Supreme Court declares that racial discrimination legislation applies only to hiring, that discrimination and harassment on the basis of race after hiring is not covered.

1990 Douglas Wilder takes office in Virginia, becoming the first black state governor in U.S. history.

1991 Thurgood Marshall announces his retirement from the Supreme Court. Citing his age and deteriorating health, Marshall removes himself amid fears that the court will now shift to a conservative majority.

President George Bush and the Congress agree on a compromise package for a 1991 Civil Rights Bill, designed to reverse several Supreme Court rulings that disallow suits filed for discriminatory hiring practices. The compromise package provides the burden of proof for nondiscriminatory hiring practices to lay on the shoulders of the employer. This reverses the position of the Supreme Court decision of 1989.

During a rancorous and bitter confirmation process, Clarence Thomas is accepted to the Supreme Court to replace Thurgood Marshall. The conservative Republican served as director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and is charged during the confirmation proceedings with sexually harassing a female employee while there. Thomas is confirmed by a margin of two votes in the Senate.

African American Biographies

Anderson, Marian (1902–), singer. Anderson received her first voice training in her church choir. Her family was poor, and money for private singing lessons came from church collections. In 1925 she placed first in a voice competition over 300 other singers, winning an opportunity to sing with the New York Philharmonic. With her career well underway, she toured Europe between 1925 and 1935, gaining experience and renown. The most controversial point in her career came in 1939 when she was barred by the Daughters of the American Revolution from singing at Constitution Hall because she was black. In protest of this, Eleanor Roosevelt organized another concert at Lincoln Hall, which was attended by 75,000 people. Anderson became the first African American to sing at the Metropolitan Opera in 1955. She retired in 1965. Her rich, pure contralto voice is known for its wide range and mastery of several styles. Anderson was awarded the lifetime achievement award by the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences in 1991.

Armstrong, Louis (1900–71), jazz musician. Armstrong learned to play the coronet while living at the New Orleans Colored Waifs' Home, to which he was sentenced for a year and a half after a boyhood prank. After his release he studied music with New Orleans jazz musician King Oliver, and in 1918 he replaced Oliver in Kid Ory's band. He eventually joined Oliver in Chicago and then went on to play the trumpet in the Fletcher Henderson band in New York. After 1925 he began making records and quickly became popular as a big band leader and soloist known for his raspy voice. Armstrong's style strongly influenced the Swing Era, but after World War II he went back to performing with informal sextets. He appeared in several movies, among them Pennies from Heaven (1936) and Hello Dolly (1969). His nickname, "Satchelmouth," was abbreviated to "Satchmo" by an English critic during his first British tour in 1932.

Attucks, Crispus (1723?–70), martyr of the American Revolution. Attucks was the first to fall in the Boston Massacre on March 5, 1770. Three were killed instantly when the British soldiers fired on the crowd assembled before their garrison, and two others were mortally wounded. Whether Attucks was an innocent victim or provoked the attack by grabbing a Redcoat's bayonet remains in dispute. His body lay in state at Faneuil Hall, and in 1888 a monument was erected in the Boston Common in his honor. Little is known of his life, although he is believed to have been a runaway slave.

Baker, Josephine (1906–75), singer, dancer. Baker began touring with a Philadelphia dance troupe when she was sixteen. After a time in Boston and then New York, Baker moved to Paris to appear in La Revue négre at the Théâtre des Champs Elysées where she introduced le jazz hot to France. She became a French citizen in 1937. During World War II she worked with the Red Cross and was a member of the Résistance and for this work was later awarded the Légion d'Honneur and the Croix de Guerre. On her estate in southwestern France, she raised her adopted children of all nationalities, her "experiment in brotherhood."

Baldwin, James (1924–87), writer. Baldwin's first and most famous book, the semi-autobiographical Go Tell it on the Mountain (1953), describes the conversion to Christianity of a young boy in desperate need of love. Baldwin grew up in poverty in Harlem, the eldest of nine children. From 14 to 16 he was a minister in a small revivalist church, and his devout Christian beliefs are central to his works. His work in the 1960s generally concentrated on civil rights themes, exploring black-white relations in Nobody Knows My Name (1961) and Another Country (1962), and examining the Black Muslims in The Fire Next Time (1963). His play Blues for Mister Charlie (1964) focuses on racist oppression. In 1948 Baldwin moved to Paris and generally spent the rest of his life abroad, returning periodically to the United States.

Banneker, Benjamin (1731–1806), mathematician, scientist. A self-educated free African American, Banneker first gained recognition in 1761 by building a completely wooden clock that kept accurate time. From 1791 to 1802 he published an almanac, the first such scientific work ever produced by an African American, which was widely circulated in the middle states. After 1790 he participated in the surveying of Washington, D.C., and in 1791 he wrote a famous letter to Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson denouncing slavery.

Bethune, Mary McLeod (1875–1955), educator. Bethune started her own school for girls in 1904 in Daytona Beach, Florida. In 1923 it merged with a boys' school to become the Bethune-Cookman College. From 1936 to 1944 she was the director of the Division of Negro Affairs of the National Youth Administration, the first African American woman to head a federal office. She also served as a special advisor to President Franklin D. Roosevelt on the problems of minorities and was a member of the unofficial "Black Cabinet" seeking integration in government. She was awarded the Spingarn Medal in 1935.

Brooks, Gwendolyn (1917–), poet. Brooks was the first African American poet to win the Pulitzer Prize (for Annie Allen, 1949) and in 1969 she was named the poet laureate of Illinois. After graduating from college, Brooks began writing poetry for the Chicago Defender, a newspaper primarily serving the black community of Chicago. Brooks's poetry explores the everyday lives of ordinary urban people. Her most noted collections include A Street in Bronzeville (1945), The Bean Eaters (1960), Selected Poems (1963), and In the Mecca (1968).

Bunche, Ralph (1904–71), diplomat. Orphaned at 11, Bunche was raised by his grandmother, a former slave. He received his education with the help of an athletic scholarship and went on to receive his Ph.D. in government from Harvard in 1934. Bunche's distinguished career as a diplomat of the United Nations included participation in the creation of the U.N. charter and service as director of the Department of Trusteeship and Non-Self-Governing Territories, undersecretary of Special Political Affairs, and undersecretary general. Throughout his career he acted as special U.N. representative to various countries; the special peace-seeking Palestine commission that he headed in 1948 helped bring about temporary peace to the Arab-Israeli conflict in 1949, earning him the Nobel Prize for peace in 1950. He was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1963.

Carver, George Washington (1864–1943), scientist. As the head of the agricultural department and director of agricultural research at Tuskegee Institute in Alabama, Carver devoted his life to improving the lot of the African American southern farmer by introducing new, soil enriching crops (peanut, soybean), teaching new farming methods, and developing new products from common foods. (He developed 300 derivative products from the peanut alone). Born on a slave plantation and orphaned at an early age, Carver was used to making his own way from the start. Throughout his life he was known for his austere lifestyle and dedication to his work. Although he had numerous, lucrative offers from business and government, he chose to remain at Tuskegee.

Chisholm, Shirley (1924–), politician. Chisholm became the first African American woman elected to Congress in 1968. She began her career as a nursery school teacher, later serving as the director of a child-care center in New York and then as an educational consultant in the division of day care of the New York City Bureau of Child Welfare. In 1964 she was elected to the New York State legislature.

Cullen, Countée (1903–46), poet. A gifted student to whom academic honors came easily, Cullen was fortunate to be the foster son of the minister of one of Harlem's largest churches. He won a city-wide poetry contest while still in high school and went on to win several more prizes and to publish regularly in major literary magazines. His first collection of poetry, Color (1925), was published before he finished college. After receiving his M.A. from Harvard, Cullen spent two years in France and England on a Guggenheim Fellowship where he met many leading writers. From 1934 until his death he taught French at Frederick Douglass High School. Notable works include: Copper Sun (1927), The Ballad of the Brown Girl (1928), and The Medea and Some Poems (1935).

Davis, Benjamin O. (1877–1970), army officer. In 1940 Davis became the first African American in the U.S. armed forces to be promoted to the rank of brigadier general. He had begun his career as a volunteer in the army during the Spanish-American war and later went on to serve in the Philippines during World War I and to teach military science at Wilberforce University and Tuskegee Institute. In 1938 he became the commanding officer of the all-black 369th Harlem Regiment of the New York National Guard. After his promotion to brigadier general, Davis served as an advisor on the use of black troops to General Eisenhower. He retired in 1948.

Douglass, Frederick (1817–95), abolitionist, orator. Douglass was an escaped slave whose natural gift for expressing himself brought him to the forefront of the abolitionist movement. His autobiography, Life and Times of Frederick Douglass, continues to be a popular primary source on slavery. Douglass made enough money on a two-year speaking tour of Great Britain and Ireland to found his own antislavery newspaper, the North Star (later Frederick Douglass's Paper), which he published from 1847 to 1860. He served as a consultant to President Lincoln during the Civil War and later fought for civil rights and the women's movement. He served at various government posts, the last as U.S. minister and consul general to Haiti.

Du Bois, W(illiam) E(dward) B(urghardt) (1868–63), sociologist, protest leader. Du Bois' early studies on race relations were the first empirical inquiries into the condition of African Americans. He gradually moved away from academic inquiry, however, and became more politically outspoken. His book, The Souls of Black Folk (1903), made him famous as an adversary of Booker T. Washington and his philosophy of accommodation. In 1905 Du Bois helped to found the Niagara Movement, whose chief purpose was to attack the ideas of Washington, and in 1909 he also helped to found the NAACP, becoming its director of research and serving as editor of its magazine, Crisis, from 1910 to 1934. Du Bois believed that all people of African descent should work together for freedom (Pan-Africanism). He encouraged the development of African American literature and art, and lectured that African Americans should develop a separate "group economy" as a way to combat discrimination and poverty. Du Bois' leftist views eventually caused him to be indicted as a spy. Although acquitted, Du Bois in 1961 joined the Communist Party, moved to Ghana, and renounced his American citizenship.

Ellison, Ralph (1914–), writer. Ellison's one novel, Invisible Man (1952), a National Book Award winner, describes the emotional withdrawal of a man overwhelmed by the irrationality of society. The contradiction of the concept of the existence of individuality in modern society is also a theme in his collection of essays Shadow and Act (1964). Ellison studied at Tuskegee Institute from 1933 to 1936, then left for New York City where he worked for the Federal Writers Project. He received a Rosenwald Fellowship in 1945, which enabled him to write Invisible Man. After lecturing in Rome for two years, he joined the faculty of Bard College in 1958, teaching Russian and American literature until 1961. Since that time he has been a visiting professor and lecturer at numerous universities.

Garvey, Marcus (1887–1940), leader. In 1914 Garvey founded the Universal Negro Improvement Association in Jamaica, where he was born. The movement had a greater following in the U.S., however, where, by the 1920s there were almost a million members. In 1918 he founded a newspaper, Negro World, to laud African American heroes and to extol African culture. He believed that racial discrimination would end only with African Americans becoming economically independent within the framework of white capitalism. His steamship line, the Black Star Line, which he founded in 1919 to promote African American trade, suspended operations in 1922 when he was indicted for mail fraud. After serving two years of a subsequent five-year sentence, Garvey's sentence was commuted by President Coolidge, and he was deported to Jamaica. He died in relative obscurity.

Handy, W. C. (1873–1958), composer. Known as the "father of the blues," Handy was the son of a minister who disapproved of his son's musical bent. He had various jobs as a schoolteacher, bandleader, and cornetist. Handy was a natural entrepreneur, however, and quickly saw the commercial value in the folk music of poor southern African Americans, which he arranged to blend with the popular music of the time—ragtime. He first received attention with "Memphis Blues" (1909), which he composed as a campaign song for Memphis mayor E. H. Crump. His most famous work, "St. Louis Blues" (1914), necessitated the founding of his own publishing company, the Handy Brothers Music Co., in order to get it published.

Henson, Matthew (1866–1955), explorer. Henson was orphaned at an early age and went to sea as a cabin boy. He met Lt. Robert Peary in 1887, and Peary asked him to accompany him on a trip to survey a canal route through Nicaragua. He subsequently became Peary's attendant on his other expeditions, and in 1909 he, Peary, and four Eskimos became the first men to reach the North Pole. He published his account of the journey in A Negro Explorer at the North Pole in 1912.

Holiday, Billie (1915–59), singer. Although she never had any technical training as a singer, Billie Holiday is considered to be the most outstanding jazz singer of her time. She was especially known for her unique phrasing and the dramatic intensity she brought to her songs. She first encountered music through Louis Armstrong and Bessie Smith records, which she was permitted to listen to by the brothel owner for whom she ran errands as a child. She debuted in 1931 in obscure Harlem nightclubs and made her first records two years later. By 1940 she was a nightclub solo attraction. She eventually succumbed to what had been a long struggle with an addiction to heroin.

Hughes, Langston (1902–67), writer. Hughes began writing poetry when he was still in school and had his first poem published when he was 18 ("The Negro Speaks of Rivers"). By the time he graduated from college, he had won two poetry prizes and published two books, The Weary Blues (1926) and Fine Clothes to the Jew (1927). A novel, a short story anthology, and volume I of his autobiography followed. Aside from his own contributions to American culture, Hughes was an important force in promoting the contributions of other African Americans (The First Book of Negroes, 1952, and Famous American Negroes, 1954). He was a newspaper correspondent during the Spanish Civil War and later wrote a column for which he created the character of Jesse B. Semple, later adapted into a successful Broadway play. Hughes' work remains cogent and popular because it is a true and entertaining reflection of the rhythms, idioms, and symbols of African American culture.

Hurston, Zora Neale (1903–60), writer. Part of the Harlem Renaissance of the 1920s, Hurston wrote about African American culture through the eyes of an anthropologist and ethnologist. Her novel Their Eyes Were Watching God (1937) was both controversial and widely acclaimed, as it neither endorsed the myth of African American inferiority, nor portrayed African Americans as victims of it. The subject of racial tension and traces of white culture are notably absent from her fiction, which liberally incorporates folklore and African American vernacular. Hurston's writing influenced such contemporary African American authors as Ralph Ellison and Toni Morrison.

Johnson, John H. (1918–), publisher. While working as a clerk and editor of the house newsletter at Supreme Life Insurance Company, a company serving primarily the black community in Chicago, it occured to Johnson that there might be a market for a digest of magazine stories, similar to Reader's Digest, but focusing exclusively on stories of interest to African Americans. Borrowing money on his mother's furniture, Johnson launched the risky publication, Negro Digest, and its first issue (1942) sold some 3,000 copies. The success of Negro Digest led to another black-oriented magazine, Ebony, which was patterned after Life. Ebony was an immediate success, quickly selling out its initial press run of 25,000 copies. Johnson went on to start other magazines, Jet, Ebony Jr., and Ebony Man as well as venture into radio and television broadcasting and book publication. Johnson subsequently became one of the richest men, black or white, in the United States.

Joplin, Scott (1868–1917), composer. Joplin hoped to become a classical pianist and composer, but he is most famous as the "king of ragtime." His 1907 instruction book, The School of Ragtime, outlined the rudiments of his unique style, which were widely imitated and hugely popular. His final years were occupied with his three-act opera, Treemonisha, a synthesis of his musical ideas. The opera was not a commercial success, and its failure led Joplin to suffer a nervous breakdown for which he was subsequently institutionalized.

King, Martin Luther, Jr. (1929–68), civil rights leader. King first came to public prominence as the leader of the Montgomery bus boycott that began in 1955. A well-educated, well-respected Baptist minister, his eloquent speeches helped give the boycott credence. He went on to found the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and tour the country lecturing on civil rights and African American problems. A believer in the nonviolent philosophy of Mohandas Gandhi, King and his followers sought to confront segregation and discrimination with direct action—sit-ins, walks, and marches. The most famous example of his nonviolent confrontation was the 1963 March on Washington, where 200,000 people heard King's "I Have a Dream" speech. In town to support a strike by city sanitation workers, King was assassinated on the balcony of his Memphis hotel room on April 4, 1968. He is the first African American to be honored with a national holiday, held around his birthday on the third Monday in January.

Lawrence, Jacob (1917–), painter. Lawrence received his early training as an artist at free art classes in Harlem, and he went on to study at the Harlem Art Workshop. Working primarily in gouache and oil, Lawrence painted series on historical and social themes and on the lives of Frederick Douglass and Harriet Tubman. He was awarded the Spingarn Medal in 1970. In 1972 he was appointed head of the art department at the University of Washington.

Louis, Joe (1914–81), boxer. Louis began boxing in Detroit in 1930, winning the U.S. Amateur Athletic Union championship in 1934, after which he turned professional. As a professional he won 68 of 71 bouts, 54 of them by knockouts. Louis suffered his first defeat at the hands of Max Schmeling, former heavyweight champion, in 1936 but came back to win the title when he knocked out Jim Braddock in the eighth round. (He successfully defended his title against Schmeling in 1938.) Known as the "Brown Bomber," Louis held the world heavyweight championship title longer than any other boxer, from 1937 to 1949, when he retired. His second and third defeats came in a comeback attempt in 1950, when he lost a fifteen-round decision to Ezzard Charles; he then went on to fight eight more times, only to lose in 1951 to Rocky Marciano. He was elected to the Boxing Hall of Fame in 1954.

Malcolm X (1925–65), African American activist. In jail for burglary in 1946, Malcolm Little converted to the Black Muslim faith (Nation of Islam) and changed his name to Malcolm X. Upon his release in 1952 he met the Nation's leader, Elijah Muhammad, who sent him on speaking tours promoting the Nation's separatist views, including the use of violence for self-protection. Malcolm X's growing popularity put him at odds with Muhammad, who suspended him from the movement in 1964. Malcolm responded by founding the Organization of Afro-American Unity and making a pilgrimage to Mecca, after which he later converted to orthodox Islam and ceased to speak of whites as evil. As his following continued to grow, threats against his life increased, and he was eventually assassinated at a rally in Harlem by Black Muslims. The Autobiography of Malcolm X, published after his death, helped to make him a legendary figure.

Marshall, Thurgood (1908–), jurist. Marshall became the first African American member of the U.S. Supreme Court in 1967. He graduated first in his class from Howard University Law School in 1933 and went on to become chief of the legal staff for the NAACP. He was appointed a judge of the U.S. circuit court of appeals in New York in 1961 and in 1965 became the solicitor general of the United States. During his tenure at the NAACP, Marshall argued 32 cases before the Supreme Court and won 29 of them, among which was the famous Brown v. the Board of Education of Topeka (1954) in which racial segregation in public schools was declared unconstitutional. A consistent liberal on the Supreme Court, Marshall continued to champion the rights of minorities. He retired from the court in 1991.

Mitchell, Arthur (1934–), ballet dancer. Mitchell received his early training at the High School for the Performing Arts in New York City. In 1956 he became the only African American dancer in the New York City Ballet, soon becoming a principal of the company. In 1966 he formed the integrated American Dance Company, which debuted in 1971 in New York City and at the Spoleto Festival in Italy. He was also the founder of the Dance Theater of Harlem.

Motley, Archibald (1891-1981), painter. Motley painted African American people in vibrant colors, capturing them in the middle of their everyday activities, a novel idea for a time when African American themes meant pictures of mammies and still-lifes with African masks. Having grown up in an all-white neighborhood, Motley's experience with African Americans was curiously more from an outsider's point of view; he studied his subjects almost like an anthropologist. He sought to paint people honestly, neither glorifying nor detracting, in order to bring about a better understanding between blacks and whites. Motley had only one major show during his lifetime, at the New Gallery in New York City in 1928.

Muhammad, Elijah (1896–1975), religious leader. Muhammad's life changed in his early 30s when he met religious leader Wallace Fard, founder of the Nation of Islam, and became an assistant minister in the sect. Upon Fard's disappearance in 1934, Muhammad succeeded him as the head of the movement. He and his followers were known for their extreme separatist views and hatred of whites. Later, Muhammad softened his position somewhat, advocating self-help and self-sufficiency among African Americans.

Owens, Jesse (1913–80), track-and-field athlete. Owens won four gold medals in the 1936 Olympic Games in Berlin (much to the chagrin of Adolf Hitler, who had intended the games to prove Aryan superiority). Owens' world record for the long jump (8.06 meters) stood for 25 years. He also set world records in the 200-meter run (20.7 seconds) and the 400-meter relay (39.8 seconds) and tied the Olympic record in the 100-meter run (10.3 seconds). Owens went on to work in community service with young people, promoting patriotism, clean living, and the importance of fair play.

Parks, Rosa (1913–), civil rights activist. On the evening of December 1, 1955, Rosa Parks was tired after a long day of work. So tired that, when ordered to give up her seat on the crowded bus to a white man, she refused. Her subsequent arrest became the catalyst for the Montgomery, Alabama, bus boycott, led by Martin Luther King, Jr., in which Montgomery's black residents refused to ride the segregated public buses for more than a year. Because the bus boycott brought King to public prominence and virtually launched the civil rights movement, Parks is known as the mother of the modern civil rights movement. The pressures of the situation, however, eventually forced the Parks family to leave Montgomery for Detroit, where she became involved in youth work, job guidance, and cultural and recreational planning.

Poitier, Sidney (1924–), actor. Widely recognized as the actor who broke the color barrier in the U.S. motion-picture industry, Poitier in 1963 became the first African American to win an Academy Award for best actor (in Lilies of the Field). Poitier grew up in the British West Indies, and when he first decided to become an actor—at the American Negro Theater in New York City—he was turned down because of his accent. He spent six months practicing enunciation and listening to the radio, and when he tried again was accepted. He first won acclaim on Broadway in 1959 as the star of A Raisin in the Sun, going on to star in many major motion pictures, among them Blackboard Jungle (1955), The Defiant Ones (1958), In the Heat of the Night (1967), and Guess Who's Coming to Dinner (1967).

Powell, Adam Clayton, Jr. (1908–72), political leader. Powell followed in his successful father's footsteps as he received his DD degree 1935 and became assistant pastor, then successor, to his father at the Abyssinian Baptist Church in Harlem. Powell's charismatic oratorical style and his drive to achieve, however, led him to a career in politics, where he played an active role in the growing civil rights movement, especially in organizing direct action forces to end discriminatory labor practices. In 1941 he became the first African American elected to the New York City Council, and in 1944 he was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives. Although he later came under severe criticism from Congress for alleged misuse of money, absenteeism, and failure to pay damages owed because of a 1960 libel suit, Powell's prestige as a national African American political figure had no contemporary equal.

Price, Leontyne (1929–), opera singer. Price's first singing experiences were in her church choir, but it was not until graduating from college that she decided to make a career of singing, going on to study at the Julliard School of Music. She made her singing debut in 1952 in a Broadway revival of Four Saints in Three Acts, which led to her being chosen to play Bess in Gershwin's revival of Porgy and Bess. She first sang opera on television in a 1955 production of Tosca, and her stage debut took place in 1957 with the San Francisco Opera, with which she sang until 1960. Although now one of the most popular opera singers in the United States and lauded in Europe, it was not until 1961 that she first sang at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, in the difficult role of Leonora in Il Trovatore. After that brilliant performance she subsequently became one of the Met's leading sopranos.

Randolph, A. Philip (1889–1979), civil rights leader. In 1925 Randolph founded and became president of the first successful African American trade union, the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. A radical socialist, Randolph worked tirelessly for unionism and integration. In 1941 he threatened President Roosevelt with a march on Washington to protest racial discrimination in wartime hiring. The president's subsequent executive order made that practice illegal. Seven years later, again after pushing by Randolph, President Truman banned discrimination in the armed forces. Randolph was an obvious choice for a director of the 1963 March on Washington, and his arguments helped win the support of President Kennedy. In 1955 Randolph was made a vice president and member of the executive council of the newly combined AFL-CIO. He retired from public life in 1968.

Robeson, Paul (1898–1976), singer, actor, African American activist. Robeson's full, basso voice lent special force to African American spirituals and international folk songs, which he sang on tours throughout the world. His signature song was "Ol' Man River" from the musical Showboat. An all-American football player and valedictorian at Rutgers University, Robeson went on to earn a law degree from Columbia University in 1923 but abandoned a career in law for the stage. He first won acclaim for his performance in the title role in Emperor Jones in 1924 and went on to star in several films and plays. In the mid 1930s Robeson became increasingly involved in international movements for peace, racial equality, and better labor conditions. As a result of his activities, and for his refusal to sign an affidavit disclaiming membership in the Communist Party, the U.S. government suspended his passport, an act that effectively ended his career until the suspension was revoked in 1958 by the Supreme Court. Robeson then moved to London and resumed touring, but returned to the U.S. in 1963 when ill health forced him to retire.

Robinson, Bill (1878–1949), tap dancer. Robinson was orphaned at an early age and raised by his grandmother. As a stableboy in Washington, D.C. he began tap dancing on street corners for money. Eventually he made it to vaudeville where he became one of its biggest stars. He is most widely known for his performances in fourteen films, three of them with Shirley Temple (The Little Colonel, 1935; The Littlest Rebel, 1935; and Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, 1937) and his ingenious creation of new dance steps, among them the famous "stair dance."

Robinson, Jackie (1919–72), baseball player. Robinson was an outstanding athlete in college. After a tour in the army he played in the American Negro Baseball League for the Kansas City Monarchs. From there he was chosen by Branch Rickey, head of the Brooklyn Dodgers, to be the first official African American player in the major leagues. He was named Rookie of the Year in 1947 and went on to help to the Dodgers win six pennants and one World Series. His career batting average was .311. He was elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1962. After retiring in 1957 he served as vice president of Chock Full O'Nuts, as cochairman of the Freedom National Bank of Harlem, and as an aide to New York Governor Nelson Rockefeller.

Rudolph, Wilma (1940–), track-and-field athlete. Rudolph was the first American woman to win three track-and-field gold medals in the Olympic Games (Rome, 1960). She won the 200-meter run and set world records in the 100-meter run (11.2 seconds) and the 400-meter relay (44.4 seconds). Rudolph's achievements were remarkable because, until age 11, she wore a brace on her leg, the result of the combined effects of pneumonia, scarlet fever, and polio when she was 4. Her determination to excel in sports made her a star basketball player and runner and first carried her to the Olympics at the age of 16 (Melbourne, 1956), where she won a bronze medal for the 400-meter relay. After retiring from running in the mid 1960s, Rudolph went on to work with young people promoting sports and education.

Smalls, Robert (1839–1915), Civil War hero. On May 13, 1862, Smalls and 12 other slaves seized control of the Confederate frigate Planter, on which Smalls was the wheelman, and turned it over to the blockading Union naval squadron in Charleston, South Carolina. Smalls continued to serve as pilot on the ship and became its captain in 1863. After the war, Smalls went into politics, serving from 1868 to 1870 in the South Carolina House of Representatives, from 1871 to 1874 in the state Senate, from 1875 to 1879, and again from 1881 to 1887 in the U.S. Congress. Although convicted in 1877 for accepting a $5,000 bribe while in the state Senate, he was pardoned by the governor.

Smith, Bessie (1894–1937), singer. Known as the "Empress of the Blues," Smith began her singing career in the saloons and small theaters of the South. She was eventually discovered by pianist Clarence Williams of Columbia Records and made her first recording in 1923. She became a huge success and recorded with such famous performers as Louis Armstrong, Fletcher Henderson, and Benny Goodman. In 1929 she made a short motion picture, St. Louis Blues, which was initially banned for its realism. By the time of the Depression, however, the blues had lost its popularity, and her career was in decline. She died from injuries sustained in a car accident.

Tanner, Henry Ossawa (1859–1937), painter. After studying with Thomas Easton and teaching briefly at Clark University, Tanner went to Paris to continue his studies. His subjects were mostly biblical, which he rendered in a conservative style. Finding it difficult to work in the United States because of the racism he experienced there, he remained an expatriate in France, returning only to exhibit his works. The recipient of many awards, Tanner was made a chevalier of the Légion d'Honneur in 1923.

Truth, Sojourner (1797–1883), evangelist, reformer. Originally named Isabella, Truth was given her freedom by her last master just before New York state outlawed slavery in 1827. As Isabella Van Wagener, she went to New York City in 1829 and became involved with various religious groups, supporting herself as a servant. She left the city in 1843, changed her name to Sojourner Truth, and became a travelling preacher. She encountered the abolitionist movement in Northampton, Mass., and thereafter became one of its primary figures. Soon after she also became an advocate of women's rights, and she travelled widely in the East and Midwest lecturing on these topics. In 1864 she was received at the White House by President Lincoln and later was appointed to the National Freedmen's Relief Association, counseling ex-slaves.

Tubman, Harriet (1820–1913), abolitionist, activist. Known as the "Moses of her people," Tubman escaped slavery in Maryland to become one of the primary "conductors" on the Underground Railroad, leading two to three hundred slaves to freedom in the North. During the Civil War she served as a nurse, laundress, and spy with the Federal forces in South Carolina. She was awarded numerous honors, but did not receive a pension for her war efforts until thirty years later.

Turner, Nat (1800–31), slave rebellion leader. Inspired by religious fanaticism and a vehement hatred of slavery, Turner, on August 21, 1831, led a rebellion that began with the murder of his master's family and ended only a few miles from the county seat of Jerusalem, the intended destination. Along the way he had collected only 75 followers, most of whom were killed or captured outside of Jerusalem. Turner himself escaped but was captured six weeks later and hanged. The rebellion terrified southerners, who had always believed that slaves were too contented or too servile to rebel. As a consequence, a new wave of oppressive legislation spread throughout the South.

Walker, Alice (1944–), poet, novelist. Although Walker published her first book of poetry in 1968 (Once) and continued regularly to publish novels, short stories, and volumes of poetry, it was not until the publication of her third novel, The Color Purple in 1982, that she achieved real recognition. The novel won the American Book Award and the Pulitzer Prize in 1983, and in 1985 it was made into a successful motion picture. Walker's works primarily depict strong black women facing constant battles against sexism and racism, and they have been praised for the truth they reveal about what is mostly a neglected topic in modern American literature. Other works include: Revolutionary Petunias & Other Poems (1973), In Love and Trouble: Stories of Black Women (1973), You Can't Keep a Good Woman Down (1981), and The Temple of My Familiar (1989).

Walker, Madame C. J. (Sarah Breedlove Walker) (1867–1919), businesswoman. Regarded as the first African American woman millionaire in the United States, Walker was orphaned at 7, first married at 14, and left a widow with a young daughter at 20. She made her fortune after developing a method of straightening curly hair. She subsequently developed an entire line of beauty products, which were sold door-to-door by "Walker agents"—saleswomen dressed in white blouses and long black skirts. She also established several Walker Schools of Beauty around the country. Walker shared her wealth freely, donating large sums to such organizations as the NAACP, Bethune-Cookman College, and homes for the aged.

Washington, Booker T. (1856–1915), educator, reformer. Washington rose from slavery and poverty to become the first president of Tuskegee Institute, which he developed into a well-endowed, well-equipped, prestigious facility that annually taught trades and professions to some 1,500 students. Washington believed that the best way for African Americans to gain respect and political power from the white community was to temporarily forget about civil rights and segregation and instead focus on economic stability by acquiring a vocational education and practicing patience, enterprise, and thrift. He was most influential between 1895 and 1915. One of his most outspoken opponents was W. E. B. DuBois.

Wells-Barnett, Ida Bell (1862–1931), journalist and reformer. Wells-Barnett is best known for her writings and lectures against the practice of lynching. In 1892, after three of her friends had been lynched, she decried the act in an editorial in the Memphis Free Speech (of which she was part owner). As a result, the newspaper's office was burned down, and she was run out of town. In 1893 she settled in Chicago where she organized a African American women's club and the Chicago Negro Fellowship League and helped to found the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Her paper The Red Record (1895) was the first published statistical study of lynching and earned her international acclaim. She was also a strong advocate of women's rights and campaigned for women's suffrage.

Wheatley, Phillis (1753–84), poet. Wheatley was taught to read and write by understanding masters, and at the age of 14 began writing poetry. Her work, published when she was 16, was largely pious, lauding such popular figures as George Whitefield and George Washington, and she became very popular in America and Europe. Wheatley was invited to the White House to have dinner with the Washingtons after her literary tour of London at the age of 18. She eventually married a man who was unsuccessful in business, however, and died in poverty.

Wilkins, Roy (1901–81), civil rights leader. Wilkins served the NAACP for fifty years in various capacities, including editor of The Crisis (1934–49) and executive secretary (1955–77). He won the U.S. Medal of Freedom in 1968 and the Joseph Prize for Human Rights in 1975. He helped to organize the 1963 March on Washington. A proponent of nonviolence, he believed that the best way to combat racism and discrimination was to make their evils plain to all; good-hearted people, then, could not fail to notice the injustices. Wilkins devoted his life to the NAACP and the civil rights movement as well and was often referred to as its senior statesman.

Wilson, August (1945–), playwright. The New York Drama Critics Circle has chosen several of Wilson's plays to receive its award for best play of the year: Ma Rainey's Black Bottom (1985), Fences (1987), Joe Turner's Come and Gone (1988), The Piano Lesson (1989), and Two Trains Running (1990). Fences won both the Tony Award for best play of 1987 and the Pulitzer Prize; Wilson received his second Pulitzer for The Piano Lesson. Wilson's plays chronicle the cycle of black history in the 20th century, decade by decade, and they all attempt to show the importance of reconnecting with the past, with the South, to discover the black man's relation to American society.

Wright, Richard (1908–60), novelist. Wright grew up in poverty in Mississippi and eventually moved to Chicago where he began working for the Federal Writers' Project. His leftist political views led him to join the Communist Party in 1932, but he rescinded his membership in 1944 because of personal differences. He later settled permanently in Paris. More than that of any other writer, Wright's work marks the beginning of a period of black protest in modern American literature. In his novels and stories he explored the position of the black man in a white society. His most famous work, Native Son (1940) describes the plight of Bigger Thomas, who accidentally kills a white girl. It was an instant best-seller and was adapted for Broadway in 1941. Wright first received attention for a volume of novellas, Uncle Tom's Children (1938), which was based on his boyhood experiences in Mississippi. Other works include the autobiographical Black Boy (1945), The Outsider (1953), and Eight Men (1961).

Vaughan, Sarah (1924–), singer. "The Divine One" began singing at an early age in her church choir. In 1943 on a dare she entered a talent contest at Harlem's Apollo Theater and not only won, but was lucky enough to be heard by singer Billy Eckstine, who then recommended her to his boss, Earl Hines. Vaughan subsequently joined Hines' band (among whom the other members were Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker). When Eckstine left to form his own band, she and Gillespie and Parker joined him, and she made her first recording with them in 1944. By 1945 she was recording and performing solo, and by 1951 she was a major concert attraction in the United States and Europe. Her voice had the range of an opera star, and her virtuosity in improvisation and interpretation were famous.

Metrics Glossary

Ampere A unit for measuring the flow of electricity. Symbol: amp.
Area Amount of surface, measured in square units.
Are A metric surface measure, equal to 100 m^2. Symbol: a.
Atto- A prefix indicating one quintillionth of a given unit.

Barrel The amount contained in a barrel; especially the amount (as 31 gallons of fermented beverage or 42 gallons of petroleum) fixed for a certain commodity and used as a unit of measure for that particular commodity. Symbol: bbl.
Boardfoot A unit of quantity for lumber equal to the volume of a board 12 × 12 × 1 inches. Symbol: fbm.
Bushel A unit of dry capacity equal to 4 pecks (2150.42 in^3) or 35.238 liters

Candela A unit for measuring the luminous intensity (amount) of a light produced by a light source.
Capacity See Volume.
Celsius The name of the scale for temperature commonly used in conjunction with the metric system. Also known as the Centigrade scale. In the Celsius scale, water boils at 100° C and freezes at 0° C, as opposed to 212° F and 32° F, respectively, in the Fahrenheit scale. Symbol: ° C.
Centare A metric surface measure equal to 1 m^2. Symbol: ca.
Centi- A prefix indicating one hundredth of a given unit.
Centigram One hundredth of a gram. Symbol: cg.
Centiliter One hundredth of a liter. Symbol: cl.
Centimeter One hundredth of a meter. One centimeter equals .3937 inch. Symbol: cm.
Chain A unit of measure equal to 66 feet (20.1168 meters). Symbol: ch.
Cubic unit symbols Examples: mm^3, cm^3, m^3, etc., used to denote volume.
Customary unit Units of weights and measures currently in use in the United States, known also as English units. These include: inches, feet, yards, and miles for length; ounces, pounds, and tons for weight; pints, quarts, and gallons.

Deci- A prefix indicating one tenth of a given unit.
Decigram One tenth of a gram. Symbol: dg.
Deciliter One tenth of a liter. Roughly equal to .21 pint. Symbol: dl.
Decimeter Ten centimeters or one tenth of a meter. Symbol: dm.
Deka- A prefix indicating ten times a given unit.
Dekagram Ten grams. Symbol: dag.
Dekaliter Ten liters, roughly equivalent to 2.64 gallons. Symbol: dal.
Dekameter Ten meters. One dekameter roughly equals 10.91 yards. Symbol: dam.
Density The weight of any sample of a substance divided by the volume measure of that sample.
Dram A unit of avoirdupois weight equal to 27.343 grains or .0625 ounce (1.771 grams). Symbol: dr.

Fathom A unit of length equal to 6 feet (1.8288 meters) used for measuring the depth of water. Symbol: fath.
Femto- A prefix indicating one quadrillionth of a given unit.
Furlong A unit of distance equal to 220 yards (201.168 meters). No symbol.

Giga- A prefix indicating a billion times a given unit.
Gill A unit of liquid measure equal to .25 pint or 118.291 milliliters.
Grain A unit of weight equal to .002083 ounce (.0648 gram), originally based on the weight of a grain of wheat. Symbol: gr.
Gram A common metric unit of weight equal to one thousandth of a kilogram. Symbol: g.

Hectare The common unit of land measure in the metric system, equal to 100 acres or 10,000 square meters and equivalent to 2.471 acres. Symbol: ha.
Hecto- A prefix indicating one hundred times a given unit.
Hectogram One hundred grams. Symbol: hg.
Hectoliter One hundred liters. Symbol: hl.
Hectometer One hundred meters. Symbol: hm.
Hogshead A U.S. unit of capacity equal to 63 gallons (238.4809 liters). Symbol: hka.
Hundredweight A unit of weight (avoirdupois) commonly equivalent to 100 lbs. (45.359 kilograms) in the United States and 112 lbs (50.803 kilograms) in England. The former is known as the short hundredweight and the latter as the long hundredweight. Symbol: cwt.

Kelvin scale A temperature scale often used with the metric system and developed by the British physicist Lord Kelvin. The starting or zero point on the Kelvin scale is absolute zero (—273.15° C, —459.67° F)—the lowest theoretical temperature that a gas can reach. On this scale, water freezes at 273.15° K and boils at 373.15° K.
Kilo- A prefix indicating one thousand times a given unit.
Kilogram The standard unit of mass in the metric system. The kilogram is a cylinder of platinum-iridium alloy kept by the International Bureau of Weights and Measures near Paris. A duplicate kilogram is kept by the National Bureau of Standards in Washington and serves as the mass standard for the United States. One kilogram is approximately equal to 2.2 pounds. Symbol: kg.
Kiloliter One thousand liters. Symbol: kl.
Kilometer One thousand meters, equivalent to 3,280.8 feet or .621 mile. Symbol: km.

Link One of the standardized divisions of a surveyor's chain that is 7.92 inches (201.168 millimeters) long and serves as a measure of length. No symbol.
Liter The basic metric unit of liquid measure, equal to the volume of one kilogram of water at 4° C or one cubic decimeter. A liter is equivalent to 1.057 quarts. Symbol: l.
Lumen A unit for measuring the brightness of light when it reaches the surface of an object.

Mass The amount of material in an object, measured in kilograms (q.v.).
Mega- A prefix indicating one million times a given unit.
Meter The basic unit of length in the metric system. It is defined in terms of the wavelength of orange-red light emitted by a krypton-86 atom (1,650,763.73 such wavelengths to the meter). One meter equals 39.37 inches. Symbol: m.
Metric system A decimal system of weights and measures, adopted first in France and now in common use worldwide.
Metric ton One thousand kilograms, roughly equivalent to 2,200 pounds. Symbol: t.
Micron The millionth part of a meter. Symbol: μ.
Mile, International Nautical A unit of distance in sea and air navigation equal to 1.852 kilometers or 6,076.1033 feet.
Mill A unit of money (but not an actual coin) used primarily in accounting.
Milli- A prefix indicating one thousandth of a given unit.

Milligram One thousandth of a gram. Symbol: mg.
Milliliter One thousandth of a liter. Symbol: ml.
Millimeter One tenth of a centimeter or one thousandth of a meter. Symbol: mm.
Minim The smallest unit of liquid measure, the sixtieth part of a fluid dram, roughly equivalent to one drop.

Nano- A prefix indicating one billionth of a given unit.

Ounce, avoirdupois A unit of weight equal to 437.5 grains or .625 pound avoirdupois (28.349 grams). Symbol: oz. avdp.
Ounce, troy A unit of weight equal to 480 grains or .833 pound troy (31.103 grams). Symbol: oz. tr.

Peck A dry measure of 8 quarts or the fourth part of a bushel (8.89 liters).
Perimeter The measure of the distance around a figure.
Pico- A prefix indicating one trillionth of a given unit.
Pound, avoirdupois A unit of weight and mass equal to 7,000 grains (.453 kilogram) divided into 16 ounces, used for ordinary commercial purposes. Symbol: lb. avdp.
Pound, troy A unit of weight equal to 5,760 grains (.373 kilogram) divided into 12 ounces troy, used for gold, silver, and other precious metals. Symbol: lb. tr.

Radian An arc of a circle equal in length to the radius of that circle. An angle emanating from the center of a circle that subtends (cuts off) such an arc is said to measure one radian. Measuring angles in radians is preferred with the metric system.
Rod A unit of linear, 5.5 yards or 16.5 feet (5.0292 meters). A unit of surface measure 30.25 yd^2 (25.2901 m^2). No symbol.

Second The sixtieth part of a minute of a degree, often represented by the sign ″ as in 13 15′ 45″, read as 13 degrees, 15 minutes, 45 seconds.
Specific gravity The ratio of the density of a substance to the density of water at 4° C.
Square unit symbol Example: mm^2, cm^2, m^2, etc.
Stere A cubic measure equivalent to 35.315 cubic feet or 1.3080 cubic yards (1.001 m^3). Used to measure cordwood. No symbol.

Tera- A prefix indicating a trillion times a given unit.
Ton, metric See Metric ton.

Volume The measure in cubic units of the amount of space inside any given container; also the measure of the amount such a container will hold. The latter is known as the capacity of the container and can be given in either units of liquid measure (see Liter, also Milliliter) or in cubic units.

Weight The force of the earth's pull on an object. Weight, in the Metric system, is commonly measured in grams.

*All boldface figures are exact; the others generally are given to seven significant figures.

In using conversion factors, it is possible to perform division as well as the multiplication process shown here. Division may be particularly advantageous where more than the significant figures published here are required. Division may be performed in lieu of multiplication by using the reciprocal of any indicated multiplier as divisor. For example, to convert from centimeters to inches by division, refer to the table headed "To Convert from Inches" and use the factor listed at "centimeters" (2.54) as divisor.

10 square chains	1 acre	0.4047 hectare
640 acres	1 square mile	259 hectares
	1 section	2.59 square kilometers
36 square miles	1 township	9,324.0 hectares
		93.24 square kilometers

Nautical Measure

Measure	Equivalents
6 feet	1 fathom	1.829 meters
100 fathoms	1 cable's length (ordinary)[1]
10 cables' lengths	1 nautical mile	1.852 kilometers[2]
	6,076.10333 feet
1 nautical mile	1.1508 statute miles[3]
3 nautical miles	1 marine league	5.56 kilometers
	3.45 statute miles
60 nautical miles	1 degree of a great circle of the earth

Dry Measure

Measure	Equivalents
1 pint		33.60 cubic inches	0.5505 liter
2 pints	1 quart	67.20 cubic inches	1.1012 liters
8 quarts	1 peck	537.61 cubic inches	8.8096 liters
4 pecks	1 bushel	2,150.42 cubic inches	35.2383 liters
1 British dry quart	1.032 U.S. dry quarts

According to United States government standards, the following are the weights avoirdupois for single bushels of the specified grains: for wheat, 60 pounds; for barley, 48 pounds; for oats, 32 pounds; for rye, 56 pounds; for corn, 56 pounds. Some states have specifications varying from these.

Liquid Measure

Measure	Equivalents
1 gill	4 fluid ounces (see next table)	7.219 cubic inches	0.1183 liter
4 gills	1 pint	28.875 cubic inches	0.4732 liter
2 pints	1 quart	57.75 cubic inches	0.9463 liter
4 quarts	1 gallon	231 cubic inches	3.7853 liters
4 British imperial quarts	1 imperial gallon	277.42 cubic inches	4.546 liters

The barrel in Great Britain equals 36 imperial gallons, in the United States, usually 31½ gallons.

Apothecaries' Fluid Measure

Measure	Equivalents
1 minim		0.0038 cubic inch	0.0616 milliliter
60 minims	1 fluid dram	0.2256 cubic inch	3.6966 milliliters
8 fluid drams	1 fluid ounce	1.8047 cubic inches	0.0296 liter
16 fluid ounces	1 pint	28.875 cubic inches	0.4732 liter
1 British pint	20 fluid ounces

See table immediately preceding for quart and gallon equivalents.

[1]In the U.S. Navy 120 fathoms or 720 feet equals 1 cable's length; in the British Navy, 608 feet equals 1 cable's length.
[2]By international agreement, 1954
[3]The length of a minute of longitude at the equator. Also called geographical, sea, or air mile, and, in Great Britain, Admiralty mile.

Circular (or Angular) Measure

Measure	Equivalent
60 seconds (")	1 minute (')
60 minutes	1 degree (°)
90 degrees	1 quadrant
	1 right angle
4 quadrants	1 circle
360 degrees

Avoirdupois Weight

Measure	Equivalents
1 grain		0.0648 gram[1]
1 dram		1.772 grams
27.34 grains
16 drams	1 ounce	28.3495 grams
437.5 grains
16 ounces	1 pound[2]	453.59 grams
7,000 grains
100 pounds	1 hundredweight	45.36 kilograms
2,000 pounds	1 ton	907.18 kilograms

Troy Weight

Measure	Equivalents
1 grain		0.0648 gram[1]
3.086 grains	1 carat	200 milligrams
24 grains	1 pennyweight	1.5552 grams
20 pennyweights	1 ounce	31.1035 grams
480 grains
12 ounces	1 pound	373.24 grams
5,760 grains

Apothecaries' Weight

Measure	Equivalents
1 grain		0.0648 gram[1]
20 grains	1 scruple	1.296 grams
3 scruples	1 dram	3.888 grams
8 drams	1 ounce	31.1035 grams
480 grains
12 ounces	1 pound	373.24 grams
5,760 grains

[1]The grain is the same in all three tables of weight.
[2]In Great Britain, 14 pounds (6.35 kilograms) equals 1 stone, 112 pounds (50.80 kilograms) equals 1 hundredweight, and 2,240 pounds (1,016.05 kilograms) equal 1 long ton.

Chemistry

Elements

(See Periodic Table of Elements supplement)

Compounds

Compounds are represented by the symbols for their constituent elements, each element followed by a subscript numeral if the number of atoms of it appearing in the compound is greater than one, as NaCl, H_2O, H_2SO_4, etc. If a radical appears more than once in a compound, the radical is enclosed in parentheses followed by a subscript numeral, as $Ca(OCl)_2$, $Al_2(SO_4)_3$, etc. Molecules consisting entirely of one element are represented by the symbol for the element followed by a subscript numeral indicating the number of atoms in the molecule, as H_2, O_2, O_3, etc. In addition: · denotes water of crystallization or hydration, as $CaSO_4 \cdot 5H_2O$.

Symbol(s)	Meaning
α, β, γ, etc. 1, 2, 3, etc.	in names of compounds, indicates different positions of substituted atoms or radicals
+	denotes dextrorotation, as + 120°.
−	denotes levorotation, as − 113°.
[ ]	include parentheses if one radical contains another, as $Fe_3[Fe(CN)_6]_2$.
−, =, ≡, etc., ⁚, ⁝, etc.,	in structural formulas, denotes a single, double, or triple bond, etc.
R—	in structural formulas, denotes any alkyl radical
⬡ or ⬡	in structural formulas, denotes a benzene ring

Ions

Ions are represented by the symbols for their respective elements or by the symbols for the elements composing them, followed by a superscript symbol indicating the electric charge, as H^+, Cl^-, SO_4^{--}, etc. Thus:

Symbol(s)	Meaning
⁻, ⁻⁻, ⁻⁻⁻, etc. ⁻¹, ⁻², ⁻³, etc	denote a single, double, triple, etc. negative charge
⁺, ⁺⁺, ⁺⁺⁺, etc. ⁺¹, ⁺², ⁺³, etc.	denote a single, double, triple, etc. positive charge
′, ″, ‴ etc.	denote single, double, triple, etc. Valence or charge (especially negative), as S″

Chemical Reactions

Chemical reactions are written in a form resembling equations, with reactants on the left and products on the right. If more than one equivalent of a compound appears, it is preceded by a coefficient. Conditions of temperature, pressure, catalysis, etc., are indicated above the arrow that shows direction. The following symbols are used.

Symbol(s)	Meaning
→, ←	denotes "yields"; also indicates the direction of the reaction
⇋	indicates a reversible reaction
+	denotes "added to; together with."
↓	(written after a compound) denotes appearance as a precipitate
↑	(written after a compound) denotes appearance as a gas
△	denotes the presence of heat
·, =, ≎	denotes equivalence of amounts in a quantitative equation

Commerce and Finance

Symbol(s)	Meaning(s)
@	at: peaches @ $.39 per pound to: nails per pound $.50 @ $.60
$, $	dollar(s); peso(s): $100
¢	cent(s): 37¢
₱	peso(s) Phillipines)
/	shilling(s) (British): 3/
£	pound(s) £25
d	penny, pence (British): 4d
¥, Y	yen
₹, R	rupee(s)
Rs	rupees
℔	per: 50¢ ℔ dozen
#	number: #60 thread

Mathematics

Symbol(s)	Meaning
+	plus (sign of addition); positive
−	minus (sign of subtraction); negative
±	plus or minus
×	times, multiplied by (multiplication sign)
·	multiplied by
÷	divided by (sign of division)

Symbol(s)	Meaning(s)
$\frac{2}{3}$, 2/3	divided by (2 divided by 3)
:	is to. divided by (ratio sign)
::	equals, as (in proportion)

=	equals
≡	identical with ~	similar to
≅	congruent, equals approximately ≦	equal to or less than
≧	equal to or greater than
≠, ≠	not equal to ∝	varies directly as ∞	infinity
$\sqrt{\ }$	square root of
$\sqrt[n]{\ }$	*n*th root of ∴	therefore
∥	parallel to ⊥	perpendicular to
π	pi, ratio of circumference of circle to diameter (3.14159+)
°	degrees
′	minutes
″	seconds
∠	angle
dx	differential of x
Δx	(delta) increment of x
∫	integral of
Σ	(sigma) summation of
$f(x)$, $F(x)$, $\phi(x)$	function of x
8!, 8̲	factorial 8

Music

Music is generally written on one or more staves. The pitch of each staff is indicated by a clef. The forms of the various notes and their corresponding rests indicate relative duration. In addition the following are used:

Symbol(s)	Meaning
♭	flat
♯	sharp
♭♭	double flat
𝄪	double sharp
♮	natural
C	common time; 4/4 meter
¢	alla breve; 2/2 or 4/2 meter
~	turn
≀	inverted turn
𝆔	mordent
𝆕	inverted mordent
>, <, ∧	accent
·, '	staccato
–	tenuto
tr	trill
⁀, ‿	slur or tie
,	phrase or breath mark
𝆕	grace note crescendo diminuendo; decrescendo
⊓	down-bow
V	up-bow

Symbol(s)	Meaning
8va	all' ottava; at the octave (raises the pitch of a staff one octave when written above it, lowers it when written below)
𝄐, 𝄐	hold

Physics

Symbol	Meaning
α	alpha particle
β	beta particle
c	velocity of light
g	acceleration due to gravity
h	Planck's constant
λ	wavelength
ν	frequency
j	square root of minus one
∽	cycles (of alternating current or voltage)

Religion

Symbol(s)	Meaning(s)
✠, +	a sign of the cross used by bishops before their names in some service books, an indication that the sign of the cross is to be made
*	in some service books, a mark used to divide psalm verses into two parts
℟	response
℣, ℣', ℣.	versicle
☧, ☧, ☧	a monogram for Christ [Gk. Χρ(ιστὸς)]

Medical Glossary

a- (prefix): not, as in afebrile, not feverish abdomen: in human beings, the cavity between the diaphragm and the floor of the pelvis, in which the stomach, intestines, liver, and other organs are located abortion: the expulsion of a nonviable fetus prior to term, either induced or involuntary (miscarriage or spontaneous abortion) abrasion: scraped place on the skin, as from a fall abscess(es): collection of pus in a body cavity formed by tissue disintegration, and often accompanied by painful inflammation absorption: assimilation by means of the digestive process accommodation: the thinning or thickening of the lens of the eye in order to adjust the focus of vision at different distances acetabulum: the hip socket achalasia: failure of a sphincter muscle to relax, causing, in the case of the cardiac sphincter, abnormal dilation of the esophagus Achilles tendon: the thick tendon that connects the muscles at the back of the calf of the leg to the bone of the heel acid: any of various chemical compounds that in water solution are sour in taste, turn blue litmus paper red, and are capable of reacting with another compound (a base) to form a salt acidosis: chemical imbalance in the blood marked by an excess of acid, sometimes affecting diabetics and leading possibly to diabetic coma acidotic: having or marked by acidosis acinous cell: cell in the pancreas that secretes digestive juice, as distinguished from the cells of the islets of Langerhans acne: common eruptive skin disorder resulting from the clogging or inflammation of the sebaceous glands acoustic nerve: auditory nerve acromegaly: disorder of the pituitary gland characterized by enlarged head, hands, feet, and most body organs acrophobia: fear of heights acupuncture: the Oriental art of traditional medicine in which needles are inserted at specific points through the skin to treat disease and induce anesthesia acupuncturist: one skilled in acupuncture acute: sudden and severe, as a disease
Adams-Stokes disease: temporary loss of consciousness caused by the heart's missing a beat, i.e., its failure to contract and pump blood on schedule addiction: the compulsive habitual use of a drug for other than medical reasons Addison's anemia: anemia, pernicious Addison's disease: chronic hypofunction (underfunctioning) of the adrenal cortex, characterized by weakness, loss of body hair, and increased skin pigmentation adenocarcinoma: carcinoma involving epithelial tissue of a gland adenoid(s): enlarged lymphoid growth behind the pharynx adenoidectomy: surgical removal of the adenoids adenoma: benign tumor which can cause hyperfunction of the parathyroid glands adenopathy: any glandular disease characterized by swelling of the lymph nodes adenotonsillectomy: T and A operation adipose: of or pertaining to fat; fatty adolescents: age groups, teenagers adrenal cortex: the outer part of the adrenal gland, which produces several hormones that affect metabolism of foods, secondary sex characteristics, skin pigmentation, and resistance to infection adrenalectomy: surgical removal of an adrenal gland adrenal gland: either of two small ductless glands situated above each kidney adrenaline/epinephrine: adrenal hormone that acts to stimulate the heart, dilate the blood vessels, and relax bronchial smooth muscles adrenal medulla: inner part of the adrenal gland adrenocorticotrophic hormone/ACTH: hormone secreted by the anterior lobe of the pituitary gland which stimulates the growth and function of the adrenal cortex aerobic: capable of living only in air or free oxygen, as certain bacteria aerobics: exercises that involve a workout for the lungs and heart as well as the muscles affect: emotion, as distinguished from thought or perception afferent: applied to nerves receiving sensations; sensory afferent nerves: nerves, sensory aflatoxin: toxic substance produced by a fungus that develops typically in stored grains or legumes such as peanuts and that is associated with cancer of the liver African trypanosomiasis: see sleeping sickness afterbirth/the placenta: so called when expelled from the uterus after the birth of a baby agoraphobia: fear of open spaces agranulocytosis: acute disease characterized by almost total disappearance of neutrophils from the blood, and often following the use of certain drugs
AHF: antihemophilic factor AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome): a serious condition whose main characteristic is a deficiency in the body's natural immunity against various diseases ailurophobia: fear of cats airway: 1. passageway for air 2. plastic breathing tube for administering artificial respiration from rescuer's mouth to victim's mouth albino: organism with deficient pigmentation. In human beings, skin is usually milky or translucent, hair is white, and eyes appear pink albumin: any of a class of protein substances found in the blood albuminuria: the presence of protein in the urine alcohol: colorless, flammable liquid distilled from fermented grains, fruit juices, and starches alcoholic: one suffering from alcoholism alcoholism: disease characterized by excessive and compulsive use of alcoholic beverages aldose: a kind of sugar algophobia: fear of pain alimentary tract or canal/gastrointestinal tract or canal: passageway for food utilized in the digestive process, extending from the mouth to the anus, and including the esophagus, stomach, intestines, and rectum alkali: any of various chemical compounds that neutralize acids and turn litmus paper blue alkaloid: organic substance containing nitrogen and having a powerful toxic effect on animals and man, as morphine or strychnine alkalosis: chemical imbalance in the blood marked by an excessive alkali content allergen: substance or material capable of causing an allergic reaction allergenic: having the properties of an allergen allergic: pertaining to or caused by allergy allergic rhinitis/hay fever: annually recurring inflammation of the mucous membranes of the nose and eyes caused chiefly by the pollen of certain plants allergic shock/anaphylactic shock: violent shock reaction, often accompanied by a rash, resulting from an oversensitized reaction to a foreign substance such as medication or the substance transmitted by an insect bite allergist/allergologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of allergies allergology: the branch of medical science dealing with the diagnosis and treatment of allergies allergy(ies): condition of heightened susceptibility to a substance that in similar amounts is innocuous to others allograft: see homograft alopecia: baldness alopecia areata: baldness, patchy alveolar bone: either of the bones of the upper and lower jaws that include sockets for the teeth alveoli (sing., alveolus): air sacs situated in the lungs Alzheimer's disease: presenile dementia amalgam: mercury and silver compound, often used to fill teeth amblyopia: dimness of sight not resulting from refractive error or disease ambulation: act of walking or moving about, postoperative ambulatory: able to walk amenorrhea: absence or cessation of menstruation amenorrhea, acquired: see amenorrhea, secondary amenorrhea, primary: failure of menarche (the onset of menstruation) to occur amenorrhea, secondary/acquired amenorrhea: cessation or interruption in the occurrence of menstruation American trypanosomiasis: see Chagas' disease amino acid: any of a group of compounds that form an essential part of the protein molecule amnesia: loss or impairment of memory, sometimes temporary amniocentesis/prenatal diagnosis: procedure for determining whether a fetus is afflicted with an inherited disorder by sampling the amniotic fluid of a pregnant woman amnion/amniotic sac: membranous sac enclosing the embryo in mammals, birds, and reptiles amniotic fluid/bag of waters: the fluid within a membrane surrounding an embryo in the uterus of a pregnant woman amoebic dysentery: form of dysentery caused by an amoeba amphetamine/Benzedrine: any of a class of drugs that stimulate the central nervous system, used medically to treat depressive mental disorders and sometimes to retard appetite, and used illicitly to induce a state of abnormal alertness and excitement Amphotericin B: antibiotic substance used to treat histoplasmosis and other deepseated fungus infections ampulla (pl., ampullae): any dilated part or sac, as the base of each of the semicircular canals of the inner ear amputate: to remove surgically by cutting, as a gangrenous limb anabolism: the process by which nutrients are built up into the living organism; constructive metabolism anaerobic: capable of living without air or free oxygen, as certain bacteria anal fissure: crack, split, or ulceration in the area of the two anal sphincters that control the release of feces analgesia: incapacity to feel pain analgesic: drug that lessens or eliminates the capacity to feel pain anal sphincter: the ring of muscle fibers surrounding the anus and controlling the passage of wastes from the body anaphylactic shock: allergic shock androgen: any of various hormones found in males that control the appearance and development of masculine characteristics, also present although in smaller amounts in females androsterone: an androgen secreted in the urine anemia: deficiency in the amount or quality of red blood corpuscles or of hemoglobin in the blood anesthesia: loss of sensation anesthesiologist: physician specializing in the study and administration of anesthetics anesthesiology: the branch of medical science that deals with the study and administration of anesthetics anesthetic: drug, gas, or other substance or procedure that produces anesthesia anesthetist: person trained to administer anesthetics aneurysm: localized dilation of the wall of an artery, forming a pulsating sac and usually accompanied by pain resulting from abnormal pressure angina pectoris: condition causing acute chest pain because of interference with the supply of oxygen to the heart angiocardiography: visualization by X ray of the heart and its major blood vessels after injection of an opaque fluid angioedema: swelling of the subcutaneous tissues angiogram: X ray of a blood vessel obtained by the injection of an opaque liquid material into the blood vessels that supply the brain angiography: visualization of the blood vessels angiology: the branch of medical science dealing with the blood vessels and lymph vessels ankylosing spondylitis: spondylitis, rheumatoid ankylosis: the stiffening or fixation of a joint, as by disease or surgery annular: having the shape of a ring anorexia: loss of appetite anorexia nervosa: emotional disturbance, especially of young women, characterized by aversion to food and resulting emaciation anovulatory: without ovulation anoxemia: deficiency of oxygen in the blood anoxia: oxygen deficiency of the body tissues antacid: any alkaline substance that can neutralize stomach acidity caused by gastric juices, often prescribed in ulcer diets anterior: toward the front anterior lobe hypophysis: the anterior part of the pituitary gland that produces growth hormones and hormones that stimulate other glands anterior urethra: the meatus, or external opening, of the urethra in the penis anthrax: malignant, infectious disease of sheep, cattle, and other animals, caused by a bacillus and sometimes transmitted to humans anti- (prefix): against; opposed to; opposite to antibiotic(s): any of a large class of substances, such as penicillin and streptomycin, produced by various microorganisms and fungi that have the power to destroy or arrest the growth of other microorganisms, including many that cause infectious diseases antibody: substance produced by the body to counteract infection and in response to specific antigens anticlotting compounds: anticoagulant anticoagulant: substance that retards clotting of the blood anticonvulsant: medicine used to control epileptic seizures antidepressant: drug that stimulates physiological activity, thereby tending to alleviate depression antidiuretic hormone: vasopressin antidote: anything that neutralizes or counteracts the effects of a poison antigen: any of several substances, including toxins, enzymes, and proteins, that cause the development of antibodies when introduced into an organism antihelminthic: drug or remedy used to destroy intestinal worms, or helminths antihemophilic factor/AHF: substance that causes clotting and stops bleeding in hemophiliacs antihistamine: any of a number of drugs that counteract the nasal engorgement and vasoconstrictor action of histamine in the body, often used in the treatment of hay fever antimetabolite: chemical that interferes with cell metabolism antiperspirant: astringent preparation that acts to diminish or prevent perspiration antitoxin: antibody produced in response to the presence of a specific toxin, which it neutralizes antivenin: antitoxin to venom or serum prepared to counteract the effects of venom anuria: inability to urinate anus: the opening at the lower extremity of the alimentary canal anvil/incus: the middle of the three ossicles of the middle ear, the bone between the hammer and the stirrup anxiety reaction: neurosis characterized chiefly by anxiety unrelated to any apparent cause aorta: the large artery originating from the left ventricle of the heart that forms the main arterial trunk from which blood is distributed to all of the body except the lungs aortic valve: the membranous valve between the left ventricle of the heart and the aorta Apgar system: system of rating the health of newborn babies aphasia: partial or total loss of the power of articulate speech resulting from a disorder in the cerebrum of the brain aplasia: arrested development or congenital absence of a part or organ of the body aplastic: marked by aplasia; underdeveloped apnea: cessation or interruption of breathing apoplexy: stroke appendectomy: surgical removal of the vermiform appendix appendicitis: inflammation of the vermiform appendix characterized by pain in the right lower abdomen, nausea, and vomiting appendicular skeleton: skeleton appendix vermiformis: vermiform appendix aqueous humor: the clear, limpid alkaline fluid that fills the anterior chamber of the eye from the cornea to the lens arachnoid: the middle of the three membranes that envelop the brain and spinal cord areola: the dark circular area around the nipple of a breast or around a pustule arrest: slow or stop the progress of, as a disease arrhythmia: variation from the normal heartbeat arterial: having to do with or carried by the arteries arteriogram: X-ray picture of an artery arteriography: technique of injecting an opaque substance into the coronary arteries and observing the material by X ray as it runs its course through the heart muscle arteriole: small artery, especially the one that leads to a capillary arteriosclerosis: thickening and hardening of the walls of an artery, with impairment of blood circulation arteritis: inflammation of an artery artery: any of a large number of muscular, tubular vessels conveying blood away from the heart to all parts of the body arthritis: inflammation of a joint, characterized by pain, swelling, and tenderness arthropathy: any disease of the joints articulate: form a joint, as one bone with another artificial respiration: artificial maintenance of respiration in someone who has ceased to breathe, especially mouth-to-mouth resuscitation ascaris: roundworms ascorbic acid/vitamin C: white, odorless, crystalline compound found in citrus and other fresh fruits and green leafy vegetables, and also made synthetically, that prevents scurvy asepsis: prevention of infection by the maintenance of sterile conditions aseptic: free from disease-causing microorganisms aseptic meningitis: see meningitis, aseptic asphyxiation: loss of consciousness caused by too little oxygen in the blood, generally as a result of suffocation by drowning or the breathing in of noxious gases aspirate: withdraw by suction aspiration: act or process of aspirating aspiration, vacuum: see vacuum aspiration aspirin (acetylsalicylic acid): analgesic drug that has fever-reducing properties, widely used to treat symptoms of the common cold, rheumatoid arthritis, and many other conditions assimilation: the process by which digested food is made an integral part of the solid or fluids of an organism asthenia: lack or loss of strength; weakness asthma: chronic respiratory disorder characterized by recurrent paroxysmal coughing caused by spasms of the bronchi or diaphragm, and resulting in many cases from an allergic reaction astigmatism: distorted vision caused by an uneven curvature of the cornea asymptomatic: condition in which antibodies for a disease are present in the blood but no symptoms of the disease can be observed ataxia: absence or failure of muscular coordination atherosclerosis: hardening of the inner walls of the arteries, resulting in a loss of elasticity, and accompanied by the deposit of fat and degenerative tissue changes athetosis: derangement of the nervous system in which the hands and feet, especially the fingers and toes, keep moving or twitching athlete's foot: ringworm of the foot, caused by a parasitic fungus atrioventricular block: disruption of normal transmission of signals between the upper and lower chambers of the heart, as from scar tissue, that may affect blood flow to the brain and cause blackouts or convulsions atrium (pl., atria)/auricle: one of the two upper chambers of the heart, which receive blood from the veins and transmit it to the ventricles atrophy: the wasting or withering away of the body or any of its parts, as from disease or lack of use attenuated: weakened in strength, as a microorganism for use in a vaccine audiologist: one who specializes in the treatment of those with hearing problems audiometer: device that measures hearing auditory canal/auditory meatus: either of two passageways, the external auditory canal leading from the outer ear to the tympanic membrane or eardrum, and the internal auditory canal passing through the temporal bone to the brain auditory nerve/acoustic nerve: nerve consisting of the cochlear nerve and the vestibular nerve and connecting the inner ear with the brain, conveying the sense of hearing and of equilibrium aura: subjective, momentary sensory perception of an unusual nature that occurs just before the onset of an epileptic convulsion Aureomycin: trade name for the antibiotic tetracycline auricle: atrium auscultation: diagnostic procedure of listening, as to sounds in the chest with a stethoscope autism: mental disorder of children, marked by lack of response to external activities autistic: suffering from or pertaining to autism autograft: tissue graft taken from one part of a patient's body for transplanting in another part autonomic nervous system: network of nerves originating in the spinal column, and including the sympathetic and parasympathetic nervous systems, that controls and stimulates the functions of body tissues and organs not subject to voluntary control, such as the heart or stomach autopsy: postmortem examination of a body, as to determine the cause of death avulsion: a tearing or wrenching away, as a structure or part of the body, as a result of an accident or by surgery axillar: underarm axillary: pertaining to or in the region of the armpit axon: cylindrical fiber in neurons carrying impulses away from the cells

Babinski relex: reflex of the toes, normal in infants, in which the large toe is extended upward and the other toes splayed when the underside of the foot is stroked, an indication in adults of neurological disease baby: see infant; newborn baby teeth/deciduous teeth/milk teeth: the first temporary set of human teeth, 20 in all, which begin to appear about the age of six months are usually complete by the end of the second year bacillary dysentery: a usually acute form of dysentery caused by bacilli bacillus (pl., bacilli): any of a class of straight, rod-shaped bacteria having both beneficial and disease-causing effects backbone: see spinal column bacteria (sing., bacterium): one-celled microorganisms that come in three varieties—bacillus, coccus, and spirillum—and that range from the harmless and beneficial to the virulent and lethal bacteriophobia: fear of germs bag of waters: amniotic fluid baldness/alopecia: common hereditary condition of males marked by a gradual loss of hair on the crown of the head until only a fringe remains around the sides and in the back, often called male pattern baldness barber's itch: sycosis barbiturates: any of a class of drugs derived from barbituric acid that depress the central nervous system, used medically as sedatives and sleeping pills and in the treatment of epilepsy and high blood pressure, and illicitly to counteract the effects of stimulant drugs barium: metallic element used in compounds, especially barium sulfate, in radiography of the gastrointestinal tract because it is radiopaque—impervious to X rays barium enema: enema in which a barium mixture is used to visualize the inner walls of the large intestine by X ray; used to detect cancer and other diseases barium meal: liquid containing barium taken orally for the visualization of the upper gastrointestinal tract by X ray barium sulfate: an insoluble barium compound used to facilitate X-ray pictures of the stomach and intestines barium swallow: X-ray examination of the esophagus as the patient swallows a liquid containing barium baroreceptors/barostats: sensitive nerve cells that respond to changes in blood pressure and may help to regulate it Basal Body Temperature/BBT: accurate measure of body temperature taken under uniform conditions, used to determine a woman's day of ovulation basal ganglia: group of nerve cells embedded in the cerebral hemisphere, the largest part of the human brain basal metabolism: the minimum energy, measured in calories, that the body needs to maintain essential vital activities when it is at rest basal thermometer: thermometer scaled in tenths of degrees instead of fifths, used by women to determine the time of ovulation BBT: see Basal Body Temperature bed-wetting: enuresis belladonna: plant with purple-red flowers whose leaves and roots yield a number of poisonous alkaloids used in medicine Bell's palsy: facial paralysis resulting from a lesion of the facial nerve bends: see decompression sickness benign: mild or nonmalignant, and responding to treatment Benzedrine: amphetamine beriberi: disease of the peripheral nerves characterized by partial paralysis and swelling of the legs, caused by the absence of B complex vitamins bicuspid/premolar: one of the four upper or four lower cusped teeth located between the cuspids (or canine teeth) and the molars bile: bitter, viscid alkaline fluid used in digestion, especially of fats, that is secreted by the liver and stored in the gallbladder bilharziasis: see schistosomiasis biliary tract: duct that conveys bile bilirubin: pigment found in bile biodegradable: capable of being broken down, as a chemical compound, by microorganisms biodegrade: break down (a substance) chemically by the action of microorganisms biological death: death of the brain, following clinical death biomicroscope: slit lamp microscope biopsy: excision of tissue or other material from a living subject for clinical and diagnostic examination birth abnormalities: birth defects birth canal: passageway formed by the cervix and vagina through which a fetus passes in the birth process birth control: the regulation of conception by employing preventive methods or devices birthmark: mark or stain existing on the body from birth bite, improper: see malocclusion black cancer: see melanoma black fever: see kala-azar black lung disease: form of pneumoconiosis common in coal miners and caused by constant exposure to coal dust bladder: elastic membranous sac near the front of the pelvic cavity, used to store urine temporarily bleb: blister formed in the epidermis bleeder: see hemophiliac blepharoplasty: surgical technique to correct congenital defects in the eyelids or to alter their size or shape blister: small rounded sac, especially on the skin containing fluid matter, often resulting from injury, friction, or scalding blood blister: blister containing blood from broken capillaries, often resulting from a pinch or other injury blood count: examination of blood components, used in diagnosis. A complete blood count reveals the size, shape, and number of white and red cells and platelets in a cubic millimeter of blood. A differential blood count determines the percentage of leukocytes and other cells blood group/blood type: classification of the blood, commonly designated AB, A, B, and O, based on the specific generic differences in the composition and chemical properties of the blood bloodletting: see phlebotomy blood poisoning/septicemia: introduction of virulent bacteria into the bloodstream, usually from a local infection such as a boil or wound and marked by chills, fever, and fatigue blood pressure: diagnostic procedure of measuring the pressure of the blood on the walls of the arteries, varying with the resilience of the blood vessels and with the heart's contraction (systole) or relaxation (diastole), usually represented by two numbers, the systolic pressure followed by the diastolic pressure blood serum: the watery, clear portion (serum) of blood blue baby: infant born with cyanosis (imperfect oxygenation of the blood) resulting from a congenital heart defect body scanner: see CT scanner body scanning: see CT scanning Boeck's sarcoid: see sarcoidosis boil: abscess of the skin caused by bacterial infection of a hair follicle or sebaceous gland bolus: lump or mass of food that has been chewed and softened with saliva bone(s): hard tissue of which the skeleton of a vertebrate animal is largely composed bone atrophy: decalcification botulism: poisoning caused by eating spoiled or improperly prepared or canned food and characterized by acute gastrointestinal and nervous disorders bowel, large: see intestine, large Bowman's capsule: dilated structure surrounding a glomerulus as part of the nephron of a kidney boy (slang): heroin brain cage: cranium brain damage: tissue destruction of the brain caused by an injury before, at, or after birth brain death: biological death brain scan: procedure of injecting a radioactive substance into the brain tissue or fluid and recording its movement by X rays brain scanning: CT scanning of the brain brain stem: all of the brain except the cerebellum, cerebrum, and cerebral cortex; the midbrain brain surgeon: neurosurgeon breastbone: see sternum breathalyser: device for measuring the concentration of alcohol in the bloodstream of drivers of motor vehicles breech presentation: birth with the baby positioned to present the buttocks first instead of the head first bridge: a mounting for holding false teeth, attached to adjoining teeth on each side Bright's disease: see nephritis bromidrosis: perspiration odor bronchi (sing., bronchus): the two forked branches of the trachea bronchial asthma: see asthma bronchial tree: the bronchi and bronchial tubes bronchial tubes: the subdivisions of the trachea conveying air into the lungs bronchiole: minute subdivision in a bronchial tube bronchitis: inflammation of the bronchial tubes, characterized by coughing, chest pain, and fever brucellosis/Malta fever/undulant fever: persistent infectious disease caused by a bacterium (Brucella) transmitted to humans from infected animals, as goats, cattle, or swine, and marked by recurrent fever, sweating, weakness, and generalized aches and pains bruxism: habit of grinding the teeth during sleep or when otherwise under strain bubo: inflammatory swelling of a lymph gland, especially in the groin or armpit bubonic plague: form of plague characterized by buboes buccal: pertaining to the cheek or mouth cavity Buerger's disease: circulatory disorder associated with cigarette smoking bulbar: pertaining to a bulb, especially the bulb of the medulla oblongata of the brain bulimia: disorder involving overeating followed by self-induced vomiting bunion: painful swelling of the foot, usually at the outer side of the base of the big toe Burkitt's lymphoma: malignant lymphoma affecting the jaw, found especially among children in Africa bursa: any of the fluid-filled sacs within the body that tend to lessen friction between movable parts bursitis: inflammation of a bursa byssinosis/white lung disease: lung disorder caused by inhaling cotton dust cadaver: dead human body, especially one intended for dissection Caesarian section: surgical delivery of a baby by cutting through the abdominal wall into the uterus caffeine: chemical found in the leaves and berries of coffee, used as a stimulant and diuretic caisson disease: see decompression sickness calcification: the degenerative hardening of tissue because of the deposit of calcium salts calcinosis: interstitial calcinosis calcitonin: hormone secreted by the parathyroid glands, important in regulating the amount of calcium in the body calculus: collection of hard material, as a deposit on the teeth calorie(s): unit of heat used especially to express the heat- or energy-producing content of foods calyx (pl., calyces): cup-shaped recess in the kidney pelvis that serves as a collecting point for urine canalization: formation of new channels or ducts within tissues canals of Schlemm: ringlike vein in the sclera of the eye that helps maintain a proper balance of aqueous humor cancer: any of various diseases that probably have different causes and originate in different tissues, but which all involve neoplasms that spread by metastasis, resulting in progressive tissue degeneration cancer-producing agents: carcinogens candidiasis: see moniliasis canine teeth: the sharp, pointed teeth, two in the upper jaw (called eye teeth), and two in the lower jaw, located between the incisors and the molars canker sore: small ulcerous lesion in the mouth near the molar teeth, inside the lips or in the lining of the mouth cannabis: hashish or marihuana Cannabis sativa: the Indian hemp plant, from whose flowering tops are derived marihuana and hashish cannula: narrow tube inserted into a body cavity or vessel, as to extract a substance or introduce a medication capillary(ies): minute blood vessel caput succedaneum: swelling under a newborn baby's scalp soon after birth, that usually dissolves in a few days carbohydrate(s): any of a group of compounds, including sugars, starches, and cellulose, that contain carbon combined with hydrogen and oxygen, essential in the metabolism of plants and animals carbolic acid/phenol: powerful caustic poison distilled from coal tar oil and used as a disinfectant carbon monoxide: colorless, odorless gas that is highly poisonous when inhaled because it combines with the hemoglobin in the blood and thus excludes oxygen carbon tetrachloride: colorless liquid that can be poisonous if inhaled over a long period, and often used as a fire extinguisher or cleaning fluid carbuncle: painful, extensive inflammation of the skin, marked by hardness and the discharge of pus carcinogen: cancer-producing agent carcinogenic: causing cancer or increasing the incidence of cancer in a population carcinoma: malignant tumor that arises in the tissue that lines body cavities and ducts (epithelial tissue) cardia: the opening between the esophagus and the stomach cardiac: of or relating to the heart cardiac arrest: a stopping of the heartbeat cardiac catheterization: the advancing of a catheter, or thin tube, through the veins to the heart chamber, in order to detect abnormalities and obtain blood samples cardiac massage/cardiovascular pulmonary resuscitation/CPR: emergency procedure consisting of the application of rhythmic pressure on the chest in order to compress the heart and start it beating again cardiac muscle: the striated but involuntary muscle of which the heart is composed cardiac sphincter: ring of muscle at the entrance of the stomach, or cardia, that opens to allow food to enter from the esophagus cardiac X-ray series: chest X rays taken after the patient has swallowed an opaque liquid such as barium sulfate cardiogram: 1. record produced by a cardiograph 2. electrocardiogram cardiograph: 1. instrument for recording the force of the movements of the heart 2. electrocardiograph cardiologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of heart disease cardiology: the branch of medical science dealing with the heart, its physiology, and its pathology cardiovascular: pertaining to the heart and blood vessels cardiovascular disease/heart disease: disorders affecting the heart and blood vessels cardiovascular pulmonary resuscitation: see cardiac massage cardiovascular specialist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and the treatment of diseases of the heart and blood vessels caries: decay of a bone or tooth (dental caries); see tooth decay cariogenic: causing caries, or tooth decay carotene: orange or red crystalline pigment converted to vitamin A in animal metabolism carotid artery: either of two major arteries of the neck supplying blood to the head carpal(s): pertaining to the bones of the carpus, or wrist carpus: the wrist carrier: person who is immune from infection of specific disease-causing bacteria that his body carries and that can be transmitted to others who are not immune cartilage: tough, elastic supporting tissue cartilage plate/epiphysis: extremity of a long bone, originally separated from it by cartilage but later consolidated with it by ossification cast(s): bit of tissue, often microscopic, having taken the shape of a vessel or cavity in which it was formed, that is found in excretions and may indicate the presence of disease catabolism: the destructive aspect of metabolism, in which living matter breaks down nutrients into simpler substances catalepsy: abnormal condition characterized by lack of response to stimuli and by muscular rigidity, often associated with a psychological disorder catalyst: substance or agent that causes a chemical reaction while remaining stable, such as an enzyme or hormone in the human body cataract: the gradual clouding and opacity of the lens of the eye, leading to impaired passage of light and loss of vision catatonic schizophrenia: see schizophrenia, catatonic cathartic: medicine for purging the bowels catheter: slender tube for drawing off fluid from a body cavity, especially urine from the bladder catheterization: the introduction of a catheter into the body caudal: situated at the tail end or bottom; posterior caudal anesthesia/caudal/caudal block: form of anesthesia in which the patient is injected in the region of the lower spinal cord (sacral canal) to block pain in the pelvic area caul: membrane (amnion) surrounding the fetus if it is unruptured and intact about the baby's head at delivery cautery, chemical: chemosurgery cavities: dental caries; see tooth decay CBC: complete blood count; see blood count

cc: cubic centimeter cecum: blind pouch or cavity open at one end, especially the cavity below the ileocecal valve that forms the first section of the large intestine celiac: pertaining to the abdomen celiac disease: see malabsorption syndrome cellular therapy: treatment for the process of aging in which a person is injected with cells from healthy embryonic animal organs with the idea that the animal cells from the particular organ injected will then migrate to the same organ in the aging body and reactivate it cementum: the layer of body tissue developed over the roots of the teeth central nervous system: the portion of the nervous system that contains the brain and spinal cord and controls voluntary action and movement centrifuge: 1. (n.) rotary machine employing centrifugal force to separate substances having different densities, as the constituents of blood 2. (v.) subject to a whirling motion to separate component parts, as of blood, that have different densities cephalhematoma: swelling under a newborn baby's scalp, that usually dissolves within a few weeks cerebellum: large section of the brain located below and behind the cerebrum, consisting of a central lobe and two lateral lobes, and which coordinates voluntary muscle movements, posture, and equilibrium cerebral arteriogram: an X-ray picture of the brain used to investigate brain damage, especially after a hemorrhage or stroke, and made by injecting opaque dye into the blood vessels serving the brain and X raying them cerebral arteriosclerosis: degenerative changes in the arteries of the brain cerebral cortex: the cells and fibers that look like a convoluted layer of gray matter and that cover the cerebral hemisphere of the brain cerebral hemisphere: one of the two halves into which the brain is divided cerebral hemorrhage: hemorrhage into the cerebrum of the brain or within the cranium cerebral palsy: inability to control movement caused by nonprogressive brain damage resulting from a prenatal defect or birth injury cerebrospinal fluid/CSF: the clear, colorless fluid that surrounds the brain and spinal cord cerebrospinal meningitis: inflammation of the membranes that cover the brain and spinal cord cerebrovascular: of or relating to the vessels supplying blood to the brain cerebrum: the upper anterior part of the brain, consisting of two hemispherical masses that constitute the chief bulk of the brain in man and is assumed to be the seat of thought and will cervical: 1. pertaining to the cervix of the uterus 2. pertaining to the neck or any neck-like part cervical cap: contraceptive device made usually of soft plastic that fits over the cervix cervical spine: cervical vertebrae cervical vertebrae/cervical spine: the top seven vertebrae of the backbone, which are located in the neck and support the head cervicitis: inflammation of the cervix of the uterus cervix: neck of the uterus cestode: tapeworm chafing: inflammation of two opposing skin surfaces, caused by warmth, moisture, or friction Chagas' disease/American trypanosomiasis: disease of Central and South America, a form of trypanosomiasis, caused by certain protozoa and spread by the bite of the assassin bug, characterized by fever, edema, and chronic heart disease chancre: primary syphilitic lesion resembling a sore with a hard base chancroid/soft chancre: venereal disease that produces a soft chancre change of life: menopause chapping: condition where skin is irritated, cracked, or roughened, more common in wintry weather character disorder: see personality disorder charas: resin obtained from the Cannabis sativa (marihuana) plant chemical diabetes: see diabetes, chemical chemosurgery: medical technique that utilizes chemistry, surgery, and microscopic analysis, especially used in the treatment of skin cancers chemotherapy: medical technique used in the prevention or treatment of disease by chemical disinfection of affected organs and tissues, especially through the use of synthetic drugs whose action is specific against certain pathogenic microorganisms but nontoxic to the patient chest cavity/thoracic cavity: body cavity corresponding to the chest, enclosed by the ribs chest/thorax: part of body enclosed by ribs chest X ray: X-ray photograph of the chest cavity that may reveal various abnormalities of the heart, blood vessels, or lungs chicken pox: contagious viral disease, especially of children, marked by a rash chilblains: localized inflammation of the skin, usually on the extremities or face, causing itching, swelling, and redness chin, plastic surgery on: mentoplasty chiropodist: podiatrist chiropody: podiatry chiropractic: method of therapy based on the theory that disease is mainly a result of nerve malfunction, which may be corrected by manipulation chloasma: liver spots Chloromycetin: brand name of an antibiotic used to treat typhoid chloroquine: drug used in the treatment of gout and other conditions cholecyst: see gallbladder cholecystectomy: see gallbladder, removal of cholecystitis: inflammation of the gallbladder cholecystogram: visualization of the gallbladder by X ray cholera: acute, infectious, chiefly epidemic bacterial disease characterized by diarrhea, vomiting, prostration, and dehydration cholesterol: fatty crystalline alcohol derived principally from the bile and present in gallstones, the blood, and in brain and nerve tissues chondromalacia: the softening of a cartilage, as under the kneecap chondrosarcoma: form of cancer originating in the cartilage at the end of a bone chorea/St. Vitus dance: disease of the nervous system characterized by involuntary muscular twitching choroid: the middle, vascular coat of the eyeball chromosome: one of the rod- or loop-shaped bodies, usually paired, found in the nucleus of every cell and containing genes chronic: occurring gradually over an extended period of time, as a disease chyme: partly digested food, in semiliquid form, as it passes from the stomach to the small intestine cilia (sing., cilium): tiny hairs in the nose and breathing passages that help filter out foreign particles that enter the body ciliary muscles: the set of muscle fibers, attached to ligaments, that support the lens of the eye cirrhosis: condition associated with excessive drinking in which there is an abnormal formation of connective tissue and a wasting of the tissue of the liver clap: see gonorrhea claustrophobia: fear of being in an enclosed place clavicle: the bone connecting the shoulder blade and breastbone; the collarbone cleft lip/harelip: genetic defect in which the upper lip is not completely joined cleft palate: genetic defect in which the hard palate is not completely joined climacteric, female: see menopause climacteric, male: in men, the psychological equivalent of the menopause, characterized by forgetfulness, depression, and declining sexual interest clinical: pertaining to or based on the actual process or symptoms of a disease as observed, as distinguished from those described as typical from a statistical or theoretical point of view clinical death: cessation of respiration and heartbeat Clinoril: sulindac clitoris: small, erectile organ of the female in the front part of the vulva clonic: of or characteristic of clonus clonic phase: the period during a grand mal epileptic convulsion when spasms of rigidity and relaxation (or jerking) occur in rapid succession clonus: muscular spasm characterized by rapid alternation of contraction and relaxation closed bite: form of malocclusion, a severe overbite in which upper teeth extend far over lower teeth when the jaws are together closed-chest massage: see external cardiopulmonary resuscitation closed fracture/simple fracture/complete fracture: fracture in which bone is completely broken, but without accompanying break in the skin clotting-deficiency diseases: hemorrhagic diseases coagulation: clotting, as of blood coarctation: stricture or contraction, as of a cavity or blood vessel coated tongue: condition in which the tongue is coated with a whitish substance, consisting of food particles and bacteria, which can indicate fever, illness, or a temporary lack of saliva cocaine: white, bitter, crystalline alkaloid used as a local anesthetic and a narcotic cocarcinogen: substance that is not cancer-producing but reacts with other substances to produce cancers coccidioides fungus: fungus, the spores of which can cause coccidioidomycosis coccidioidomycosis/desert rheumatism/valley fever: infectious disease caused by fungus spores and characterized by symptoms resembling pneumonia and tuberculosis and the formation of reddened bumps coccyx: the tail end of the spinal cord cochlea: spiral-shaped structure of the inner ear containing the essential organs of hearing, including the organ of Corti cochlear nerve: the part of the auditory nerve leading from the cochlea of the inner ear to the brain, conveying the sense of hearing codeine: white, crystalline alkaloid, derived from morphine and used in medicine as an analgesic and to suppress coughing coitus: sexual intercourse coitus interruptus: contraceptive method whereby the male withdraws before he ejaculates cold, common: viral infection of the respiratory tract cold sores: herpes simplex colitis: inflammation of the colon collagen: fibrous protein that forms the chief constituent of the connective tissues of the body, such as cartilage, skin, bone, and hair collapsed lung: pneumothorax collarbone: clavicle colon: the part of the large intestine extending from the cecum to the rectum and divided into the ascending colon, transverse colon, descending colon, and the sigmoid colonoscope: speculum used to examine the colon color blindness: inherited vision defect consisting of the total or partial inability to discriminate between certain colors, usually red, green, and blue colostomy: the formation of an artificial opening in the colon through which solid wastes can pass colostrum: the creamy, yellowish, milklike substance rich in proteins, that is produced by a mother's breasts the first few days after having given birth colposcopy: microscopic technique for visual examination of the cervix and vagina coma: prolonged loss of consciousness comminuted fracture: fracture in which bone is splintered or crushed common bile duct: duct formed by the juncture of the hepatic and cystic ducts, and carrying digestive enzymes from the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder to the duodenum complete fracture: see closed fracture compound fracture/open fracture: fracture accompanied by an open wound, often exposing bone that is completely broken compulsion: urgent need to perform certain ritualistic acts, often irrational, a symptom of certain neuroses computed tomography: see CT scanning conception: union of spermatozoon and ovum, first step in the birth process; fertilization concussion: violent shock to the brain, typically caused by a blow to the head, as in a fall, that impairs the functioning of the brain, usually temporarily condom: membranous sheath for the penis that serves as a contraceptive device condyloma acuminatum: see venereal wart cone: one of many photosensitive cone-shaped bodies in the retina of the eye, sensitive to color and daylight vision congener: natural product of fermentation found in small amounts in all alcoholic beverages congenital: acquired prior to or at birth, or during development as a fetus, as fetal abnormality because of the mother's contraction of rubella congenital defects: see birth defects congenital heart disease: deformity of the heart or of major blood vessels existing from birth congestion: excessive accumulation of blood or fluid in an organ or tissues conjunctiva: mucous membrane on the inner part of the eyelid and extending over the front of the eyeball conjunctival sac: the small sac at the inner corner of the eye between the eyeball and the lower lid that serves as a collecting pool for tears conjunctivitis: inflammation of the conjunctiva (pinkeye) connective tissue: the fibrous tissue that binds together or supports the parts of the body, as cartilage, tendons, and ligaments conscience: superego conservative: of or involving procedures or treatment intended to preserve function of diseased or injured parts, utilizing established therapeutic methods constipation: inactivity of the bowels resulting in difficult, infrequent, or incomplete evacuation constrict: to become narrower, as a blood vessel contact dermatitis: see dermatitis, contact contact lens: one of a pair of glass or plastic lenses fitted directly over the cornea of each eye to correct vision defects contagion: communication of disease by contact, direct or indirect contagious: (of a disease) transmitted by direct or indirect contact continuous positive airway pressure: procedure in which high-oxygen is forced into the lungs of newborns suffering from respiratory difficulty contraception: the prevention of conception contraceptive: device or substance designed to prevent conception contraindication: symptom or sign that makes a particular course of treatment inadvisable conversion hysteria: see conversion reaction conversion reaction/conversion hysteria: neurosis characterized by manifestation of physical symptoms, such as blindness or deafness, without organic cause, as an expression of psychic conflict convulsion/seizure: spontaneous violent and abnormal muscular contraction or spasm of the body Cooley's anemia: see thalassemia corium: dermis

corn(s): horny thickening of the cuticle common on the feet cornea: the transparent lens surface of the eye coronary: encircling or crowning, such as the two arteries branching from the aorta and encircling the heart coronary arteries and veins: the network of arteries and veins that nourishes the muscle and tissue of the heart coronary artery disease: fatty obstructions in the coronary vessels that nourish the heart, thus impairing adequate delivery of oxygen to heart coronary attacks: heart attacks coronary insufficiency: insufficient blood circulation through the coronary arteries coronary occlusion: closure of the coronary artery resulting from buildup of fatty deposits or coronary thrombosis coronary thrombosis: interference with the blood supply to the heart muscle because of a blood clot in the coronary artery corpus callosum: fibrous tissue connecting the two hemispheres of the cerebrum of the brain corpuscle: one of the cells that make up blood, either a red corpuscle (erythrocyte) or a white corpuscle (leukocyte) corpus luteum: mass in the ovary formed by the rupture of a Graafian follicle that releases an ovum during each menstrual cycle cortex: the outer layer or covering of an organ or part, as of the cerebrum or cerebellum of the brain (called gray matter), of the adrenal glands, or of the kidneys corticoids: any of the hormones manufactured in the adrenal cortex corticosteroid: 1. any of the steroids secreted by the cortex of the adrenal gland 2. any steroid hormone resembling in its effects the steroids secreted by the adrenal gland corticosterone: steroid hormone of the adrenal cortex associated with blood sugar levels and other metabolic functions Corti, organ of: see organ of Corti cortisone: powerful hormone extracted from the adrenal cortex and also made synthetically coryza: inflamed mucous membranes in the nose, with discharge of mucus characteristic of a head cold cosmetic surgeon: physician specializing in cosmetic surgery cosmetic surgery: plastic surgery concerned with improving the appearance of parts of the body costal: pertaining to or near a rib or ribs cough: to expel air or phlegm from the lungs in a noisy or spasmodic manner cowpox: live calf lymph virus, used in smallpox vaccinations coxa: the hip or hip joint coxa vara: deformity of the hip joint caused by curvature of the femur toward the joint, thus shortening the affected leg and causing a limp Coxsackie virus: any of a group of viruses causing various diseases in humans, including a form of meningitis cradle cap: disease of the scalp, especially in babies, marked by yellowish crusts cranial nerves: the twelve pairs of nerves that originate within the brain cranioplasty: surgical correction of the skull, as to repair a congenital defect craniotomy: any surgery involving an opening in the skull cranium: the part of the human skull that encloses and protects the brain crash: (slang) amphetamine cresol: compound obtained by destructive distillation of coal, beechwood, or pinewood, used as an antiseptic and disinfectant cretinism: stunted or impaired physical and mental development because of deficiency of thyroxin, a secretion of the thyroid gland, in infancy or during the fetal period crib death: see sudden infant death syndrome crossed eyes/crosseye: strabismus characterized by a tendency of the eyes to turn inward toward the nose cross-match: to intermix constituents of the blood of a prospective donor with that of a prospective recipient to check blood compatibility croup: spasm of the trachea, especially the larynx, occurring in children and marked by difficulty in breathing and a barking cough crown: the part of a tooth exposed beyond the gum and covered with enamel cryosurgery: type of surgery in which extremely low temperatures are employed either locally or generally to destroy tissue, as in malignant skin lesions cryotherapy: inducement of peeling by freezing the skin with carbon dioxide to improve appearance of flat acne scars and shallow wrinkles cryptorchidism/cryptorchism: failure of the testicles to descend normally CSF: see cerebrospinal fluid
CT scanner/body scanner: computerized X-ray machine used in CT scanning CT (computed tomography) scanning/body scanning: procedure for producing a cross-sectional, computer-generated, composite X-ray picture of the body or an organ, as the brain, by rotating about a site and taking a series of radiographs directed to it culdoscopy: technique for examining the female reproductive organs within the abdominal cavity culture: the development of microorganisms or living cells in a special medium, as gelatin, often as a means of analyzing a body fluid or tissue for the presence of disease Cuprimine: penicillamine cupula: structure within each of the semicircular canals of the inner ear, communicating changes in motion curettage: the scraping of a cavity with a curette, as to remove morbid matter or obtain tissue for diagnosis curette: small instrument, usually resembling a spoon or scoop with sharpened edges, used in curettage Cushing's syndrome: excess of hormones secreted by the adrenal cortex, characterized by weakness, purple streaks in the skin, and a moon face cusp: 1. one of the projections or points on the crown of a tooth 2. one of the triangular flaps of a heart valve cuspid/canine tooth/eye tooth: one of the two upper or two lower sharp, pointed teeth located between the incisors and the bicuspids cutaneous: pertaining to, affecting, or on the skin cuticle: 1. epidermis 2. crescent of toughened skin around the base of the nail cyanosis: disordered circulatory condition resulting from inadequate oxygen supply in the blood and causing a livid bluish color of the skin cyanotic: bluish in color because of cyanosis cyclamates: sodium cyclamate cycloid: see cyclothymic cyclothymic/cycloid: describing a personality disorder in which the individual is subject to sharply defined moods of elation or depression cynophobia: fear of dogs cyst: saclike mass containing liquid or semisolid material cystectomy: 1. surgical removal of the gallbladder or of the urinary bladder 2. surgical removal of a cyst cystic duct: duct that carries bile from the gallbladder to the juncture with the hepatic duct, where the common bile duct is formed cystic fibrosis: hereditary disease of infants and young children marked by cysts, excessive fibrous tissue, and mucous secretion cystitis: inflammation of the bladder, characterized by a burning sensation when voiding, frequent need to urinate, and sometimes blood in the urine cystocele: hernia in which part of the bladder protrudes through the wall of the vagina cystoscope: device used to view the interior of the bladder after being inserted in the urethra cystoscopy: the technique of viewing the interior of the bladder by means of a cystoscope cystostomy: the making of an artificial outlet from the urinary bladder

D and C: see dilation and curettage dandruff: condition marked by itching and flaking of the skin, especially of the scalp db: decibel
DBI/phenformin: drug that stimulates the production of insulin in the pancreas
D.D.S.: Doctor of Dental Surgery decalcification/bone atrophy: the loss of lime or calcium salts from the bones or teeth decibel/db: unit for measuring the intensity of sound deciduous teeth: baby teeth decision-maker: ego decompression sickness/caisson disease/the bends: painful, sometimes fatal condition that results from bubbles of nitrogen formed in the blood when a rapid reduction in pressure occurs, as when a diver returns directly to the surface after a period deep under water decongestant: agent designed to relieve congestion defecation: the discharge of feces defibrillation: act or process of stopping fibrillation of the heart muscle and restoring normal rhythm, as by jolting it with an electric current defibrillator: device that sends a jolt of electricity into the heart muscle in order to stop fibrillation and get the heart back to normal rhythm degenerative: characterized by deterioration or change from a normally active state to a lower or less active form, especially of body tissue, as in a disease process degenerative joint disease: see osteoarthritis deglutition: act of swallowing dehydration: loss or removal of water, as from body tissues déjà vu: distortion of memory in which a new situation or experience is regarded as having happened before delirium tremens/DTs: violent form of delirium characterized by nausea, confusion, crawling sensation on the skin, and hallucinations caused especially by rapid lowering of blood alcohol levels in very heavy drinkers dementia: mental deterioration resulting from an organic or functional disorder Demerol: meperidine demyelination: gradual loss of myelin, resulting in paralysis, numbness, or other loss of nerve function dendrites: short, gray filaments in neurons that conduct impulses toward the cell body dental calculus/tartar: hard deposit of minerals and other substances that collects on teeth dental caries/cavities: ulceration and decay of teeth; see tooth decay dental floss: strong, silky filament for cleaning between the teeth dental surgeon: see oral surgeon dentin: the hard calcified substance that forms the body of a tooth dentist: one who specializes in the diagnosis, prevention, and treatment of disease affecting the teeth and their associated structures dentistry: the branch of medical science that concerns the study, diagnosis, prevention, and treatment of diseases of the teeth, gums, and associated structures dentition: the kind, number, and arrangement of the teeth in the mouth denture(s): frame of plastic or other material adapted to fit the mouth and containing one, several, or a complete set of artificial teeth to replace natural teeth that have been lost depilatory: chemical product capable of removing or loosening hair depressant: drug or other substance that reduces or calms the physiological processes of body or mind depression: 1. mental state marked by melancholy, pessimism, or dejection 2. psychotic condition characterized by stuporous withdrawal from reality and intense guilt feelings depressive reaction: 1. neurosis characterized by persistent feelings of depression and pessimism unrelated to any apparent cause 2. (involutional melancholia) psychosis usually occurring in women around the time of menopause, and in men during their 50s, characterized by hopeless melancholy, anxiety, weeping, and often delusions dermabrasion: the removal of layers of skin by planing with an abrasive tool to dispose of wrinkles or skin blemishes dermal: of or relating to the skin dermatitis: inflammation of the skin dermatologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of disorders of the skin dermatology: the branch of medical science dealing with disorders of the skin dermis/corium/true skin: the inner layer of the skin, which contains blood vessels, nerves, connective tissue, sweat glands, and sebaceous glands DES: see diethylstilbestrol desert rheumatism: coccidioidomycosis Desoxyn: methamphetamine detached retina/separated retina: eye disorder in which the membrane at the back of the eye (retina) is separated from its bed, as by being torn, thus impairing vision developmental disability: any condition which interferes with a child's development, especially one which will constitute a handicap throughout the individual's life, such as mental retardation or cerebral palsy Dexedrine: dextroamphetamine dextroamphetamine (d-amphetamine)/Dexedrine: isomer of the amphetamine compound, considered to have a more stimulating effect on the central nervous system than amphetamine dextrose: form of glucose (a sugar) found normally in animals, used in intravenous feeding because it is readily assimilated by the blood diabetes, chemical/prediabetic condition: condition indicating predisposition to development of diabetes, when blood sugar level remains abnormally high for too long after taking a glucose tolerance test diabetes insipidus: production of excessive amount of urine because of deficiency of antidiuretic hormone diabetes mellitus: disease associated with inadequate production of insulin and characterized by excessive urinary secretion containing abnormal amounts of sugar, accompanied by emaciation, excessive hunger, and thirst diabetic: one who has diabetes diabetic acidosis: advanced stage of diabetes treated with insufficient insulin, characterized by increasing buildup of ketone bodies, drowsiness, and, if untreated, coma diabetic coma: state of unconsciousness in a diabetic resulting from insufficient insulin, characterized by deep, labored breathing and a fruity odor to the breath diabetic ketosis: early stage of diabetes treated with insufficient insulin, characterized by excessive urination, thirst, and hot, dry skin diabetic retinopathy: disease of the eye associated with diabetes in which new, abnormal blood vessels form on the surface of the retina, sometimes marked by bleeding diacetylmorphine: heroin diagnosis: identification of a disease or disorder by its characteristic symptoms, or the conclusions reached in a particular instance dialysis: the separating of mixed substances by means of wet membranes, as the action of the kidneys, especially applied to an artificial process to remove waste products and excess fluid from the bloodstream of a patient with defective kidneys diaper rash: rash caused by the ammonia produced by the urine in diapers diaphragm: 1. dome-shaped layer of muscle between the chest and abdomen whose contraction enlarges the rib cage for inflation of the lungs in breathing 2. contraceptive device of molded rubber or soft plastic material used to cover the cervix and prevent entry of spermatoza diaphragmatic hernia: hernia, hiatus diarrhea: frequent and fluid evacuation of feces diastole: the instant when the heart is relaxed as the ventricles fill with blood prior to contraction and pumping (systole) diastolic pressure: measure of blood pressure taken when the heart is resting, the lower of the two figures in a reading diathermy: treatment by means of heat generated within the body of high-frequency radiation diethylstilbestrol/DES/stilbestrol: synthetic hormone resembling estrogen implicated in the formation of vaginal and cervical cancers in the daughters of women who had taken the hormone during pregnancy differential blood count: see blood count digestion: process of dissolving and chemically changing food in the alimentary tract so that it can be assimilated by the blood and its nutrients can be absorbed by the body digestive tract: see gastrointestinal tract digitalis: the dried leaves of foxglove, containing several glycosides, often used as a heart tonic dilate: to become larger, as the pupil of the eye in diminished light dilation and curettage/D and C: enlarging the opening into the uterus and the scraping of the uterus with a curette dimethyltryptamine: see DMT diphenylhydantoin: phenytoin diphtheria: respiratory, bacterial disease marked by the formation of a false membrane that obstructs breathing diplopia: see double vision disclosing tablets: tablets which, after being chewed, leave a temporary stain on plaque remaining on teeth after brushing disinfectants: germicides dislocation(s): the partial or completed displacement of one or more of the bones at a joint displacement: transference of intense anxiety unconsciously felt about a particular conflict to a substitute, which is regarded consciously with the same intensity of anxiety, a manifestation of the phobic reaction dissociative reaction: neurosis characterized by escape from a part of the personality by means of dream states, amnesia, forgetfulness, etc.

distal: relatively remote from the center of the body, or from a point considered as central distal muscles: the muscles of the extremities (the hands and the feet) distillation: separation of the more volatile parts of a substance from the less volatile by boiling and condensing the vapors into separate liquids diuresis: excessive excretion of urine diuretic(s): substance stimulating the secretion of urine diverticula (sing., diverticulum): pouches or sacs opening off the large intestine diverticulitis: inflammation of diverticula in the digestive tract, especially in the colon diverticulosis: the presence of diverticula in the digestive tract diverticulum (pl. diverticula): abnormal pouch or bulge protruding from an organ or part, as from the colon or the intestines
DNT/dimethyltryptamine: synthetic hallucinogen
DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid): chemical in the human cell that controls body development
Dolly (slang): methadone DOM/STP: synthetic hallucinogen dopamine: chemical compound found in the brain, needed in the synthesis of norepinephrine and epinephrine Doriden: glutethimide dorsal: toward, near, or in the back double vision/diplopia: condition in which a single object is perceived as two images because of an inability to coordinate focusing of the eyes douching: flushing of a body part or cavity, especially the vagina, with water as a means of cleansing Down's syndrome/Mongolism: congenital mental and physical retardation resulting from a chromosomal anomaly, accompanied by variable signs, including a flat face and pronounced epicanthic folds downs/downers/goof balls (slang): barbiturates or other drugs that depress the central nervous system
DPT injection: injection to provide immunity against diphtheria, pertussis (whooping cough), and tetanus Dramamine: proprietary drug used to counteract motion sickness dreamer (slang): morphine dropsy: former term for edema, especially when caused by cardiac insufficiency drug(s): 1. any substance other than food that changes or has an effect on the body or mind 2. narcotic drug dry socket: painful complication of a tooth extraction in which underlying tissue of the alveolar bone is exposed to infection DTs: delirium tremens Duchenne's muscular dystrophy: pseudohypertrophic muscular dystrophy duct/hepatic: either of two ducts of the liver that join to form the common hepatic duct and that carry bile ductless glands: see endocrine glands dumdum fever: see kala-azar duodenal ulcer: ulcer of the duodenum of the small intestine duodenum: the first section of the small intestine, leading from the stomach to the jejunum dura mater: the tough, fibrous, outermost membrane of the three membranes covering the brain and spinal cord dwarfism: disorder characterized by stunted growth dysentery: severe inflammation of the mucous membrane of the large intestine, characterized by bloody stools, pain, cramps, and fever dysfunction: impairment or abnormal functioning, as of an organ dyslexia: 1. impairment or loss of the ability to read, as from a stroke 2. in children, impairment of ability to acquire language skills because of motor or perceptual disabilities dysmenorrhea: painful menstruation dyspareunia: painful sexual intercourse dyspepsia: indigestion, characterized by heartburn, nausea, pain in the upper abdomen, and belching dysphagia: difficulty in swallowing dysphasia: disorder of the cerebral centers characterized by difficulty in understanding or using speech dyspnea: labored, difficult breathing dystrophy: 1. defective or faulty nutrition 2. any of various neurological or muscular disorders, as muscular dystrophy dysuria: difficult, painful, or incomplete urination eardrum/tympanic membrane/tympanum: drumhead membrane separating the middle ear from the external ear earwax: waxy substance secreted by the glands lining the passages of the external ear ECG: electrocardiogram echocardiogram: graph recording the pattern of deflection of sound waves by the heart, used in diagnosing heart abnormalities eclampsia: toxemia of pregnancy involving convulsions

E. coli/Escherichia coli: common bacillus found normally in the human intestines, usually harmless but having certain strains that cause urinary tract and other infections
ECPR/external cardiopulmonary resuscitation: closed-chest massage, used for those suffering cardiac arrest ectoderm: outermost layer of tissue ectopic/atopic: out of normal place or position ectopic pregnancy: abortive pregnancy outside the uterus, as in the Fallopian tubes or abdominal cavity eczema: noncontagious skin condition characterized by itching and scaling of the skin edema: swelling of tissues because of abnormal fluid accumulation edentulous: toothless EEG: see electroencephalogram efferent: applied to nerves, communicating impulses so that directive action can be taken egg cell: ovum ego: the self, considered as the seat of consciousness ejaculation: expulsion of semen during orgasm EKG: see electrocardiogram elective surgery: surgery that is not essential for the maintenance of physical health, as cosmetic surgery

Electra complex: repressed sexual attachment of daughter to father, analogous to the Oedipal complex involving the son and mother electric shock: the body's reactions to the passage through it of an electric current, as involuntary muscular contractions electrocardiogram/ECG/EKG: graph recording the pattern of electric impulses produced by the heart, used in the diagnosis of heart disease electrocardiograph: machine used to record the electric current produced by the heart muscle electrocardiography: technique of producing electrocardiograms and interpreting them electroencephalogram/EEG: graph recording the pattern of electric impulses produced by the brain, used in the diagnosis of neurological disorders electroencephalograph: machine used to record the electric current produced by the brain electroencephalography: technique of producing electroencephalograms and interpreting them electrolysis: technique for removing unwanted hair by destroying the hair root with an electric current electromyogram/EMG: graph recording the electrical activity of a muscle electromyography: technique of producing electromyograms and interpreting them electroshock: describing a form of treatment for psychological disorders in which a controlled electric current is passed through the patient's head, producing convulsions and unconsciousness, usually given in series electrosurgery/surgical diathermy: surgical procedure utilizing electricity to destroy tissue elephantiasis: lymphatic edema, especially of the legs and scrotum, a symptom of filariasis embolism: the stopping up of a vein or artery, as by a blood clot, that has been brought to the point of obstruction by the bloodstream embolus: object moving within the bloodstream, as a blood clot or air bubble, that is capable of causing an obstruction (embolism) in a smaller vessel embryo: the rudimentary form of an organism in its development before birth, usually considered in the human species to be the first two months in utero emetic: medicine or substance used to induce vomiting emphysema: puffed condition of the alveoli or air sacs of the lung (or other tissues or organs) because of infiltration of air and consequent loss of tissue elasticity enamel: the layer of hard, glossy material forming the exposed outer covering of the teeth encephalitis: inflammation of the brain encephalogram: X-ray picture of the brain made by encephalography encephalography: X-ray visualization of the brain following the removal of cerebrospinal fluid and its replacement with air or other gases endarterectomy: surgical procedure in which carbon dioxide is forced through hardened arteries to ream out fatty blockages endemic: confined to or characteristic of a given locality, as a disease endocarditis: inflammation of the membrane (endocardium) lining the chambers of the heart, sometimes caused by bacteria endocardium: the delicate membrane that lines the chambers of the heart endocrine gland: one of several ductless glands that release secretions (hormones) directly into the blood or lymph and that exert powerful influences on growth, sexual development, metabolism, and other vital body processes endocrinologist: physician specializing in endocrinology endocrinology: the branch of medical science dealing with the structure and function of the endocrine glands and their hormones endoderm: innermost layer of tissue endodontics: branch of dentistry dealing with root canal work and the dental pulp endodontist: dentist specializing in root canal work endogenous insulin: self-produced insulin endolymph: fluid within the semicircular canals of the inner ear endometrial: of or pertaining to the endometrium endometrioma: mass of tumorlike endometrial cells as a result of endometriosis endometriosis: condition in which tissue that lines the uterus (endometrium) grows outside the uterus in the pelvic cavity endometrium: the lining of the uterus endoscope: instrument for examining a hollow organ or an internal cavity, as the urinary bladder or the urethra endoscopy: examination with an endoscope enema: liquid injected into the rectum as a purgative or for diagnostic purposes ENT: otolaryngology (ear, nose, and throat doctor) enteric: pertaining to the intestines enteric fever: see typhoid enteritis: inflammation of the intestines, especially of the small intestine enterocele: hernia in which part of the small intestine protrudes through the wall of the vagina enuresis/bed-wetting: involuntary urination during sleep at night enzyme(s): organic substance, usually a protein, produced by cells and having the power to initiate or accelerate specific chemical reactions in metabolism, such as digestion eosinophil: any of a type of white blood cell that stains easily when a particular red dye (eosin) is applied ephedrine: drug that dilates the bronchi, used to reduce nasal congestion and relieve asthma epicanthic fold/epicanthus: vertical fold of skin at the inner corner of the eyelid, found chiefly in certain Asian peoples epicanthus: see epicanthic fold epidemic: 1. (adj.) affecting many in a community at once, as a disease 2. (n.) the temporary prevalence of a disease in a community or throughout a large area epidemiologist: physician specializing in epidemiology epidemiology: the branch of medical science concerned with the study and prevention of epidemic diseases epidermis/cuticle: the outer, nonvascular layer of the skin, overlying the dermis epididymis: portion of the seminal ducts just above the testis epigastric: pertaining to the upper middle part of the abdomen epigastrium: the upper middle (epigastric) part of the abdomen epiglottis: the leaf-shaped plate of cartilage at the base of the tongue that covers the trachea during the act of swallowing epilepsy: chronic nervous disorder characterized by sudden loss of consciousness and sometimes by convulsions epileptic: 1. (adj.) pertaining to epilepsy 2. (n.) person who has epilepsy epinephrine: see adrenaline epiphysis: cartilage plate on the extremity of a long bone episiotomy: incision made during labor to enlarge the vaginal area enough to permit passage of the baby epistaxis: nosebleed epithelial: pertaining to the epithelium epithelium: membranous tissue that lines the canals, cavities, and ducts of the body, as well as all free surfaces exposed to the air erection: enlarged and firm state of the penis when sexually stimulated eruption: 1. emergence of a tooth through the gums 2. a breaking out of a rash on the skin erysipelas: acute bacterial skin infection characterized by bright red patches erythema: redness of the skin, a symptom occurring in various forms in different conditions having various causes, as from infection or a burn erythremia: polycythemia vera erythrocyte/red blood cell/red corpuscle: cell found in the bloodstream, often lacking a nucleus, the carrier of hemoglobin erythrophobia: fear of blushing eschar: dry crust or scab left by a burn caused by heat or corrosive chemical action

Escherichia coli: see E. coli esophagoscope: device inserted into the esophagus to permit its inspection esophagus (gullet): the tube through which food passes from the mouth to the stomach essential: of unknown cause, as a disease or condition essential hypertension: see hypertension, essential estrogen: any of several hormones found in the ovarian fluids of the female which promote growth of secondary sex characteristics and influence cyclical changes in the female reproductive system ethanol: ethyl alcohol ether: colorless, volatile, flammable chemical compound used as an anesthetic ethmoid bone: sievelike bone at the base of the skull behind the nose ethyl alcohol/grain alcohol/ethanol: product of the distillation of fermented grains, fruit juices, and starches, used in beverages, and having intoxicating properties etiologist: physician specializing in studying the causes of disease etiology: 1. the cause or causes of a disease 2. the branch of medical science dealing with the causes of disease eunuch: in males, the failure at puberty to develop secondary sex characteristics because of removal or disorder of the testicles Eustachian tube: passage connecting the middle ear to the upper throat which equalizes air pressure on both sides of the eardrum Ewing's sarcoma: malignant tumor of the shafts of the long bones in children excise: cut out or remove by surgery excision: act or procedure of cutting out or removing surgically excrete: to eliminate, as waste matter, by normal discharge from the body excretion: 1. the act of excreting 2. the body's waste matter, as sweat, urine, and feces exocrine gland: any of various glands, such as mammary or sebaceous glands, having ducts that carry their secretions to specific locations exophthalmic goiter: hyperthyroidism expectorant: medicine that promotes the discharge of mucus from the respiratory tract expectorate: discharge from the mouth, as saliva or phlegm exploratory: performed for the purpose of making a diagnosis: said of a surgical operation extension: state of being extended or straightened extensor: muscle whose function is to extend or straighten a part of the body external cardiac massage: cardiac massage extraction: surgical removal of a tooth extrinsic: originating or situated outside an organ or part exudate: substance filtered through the walls of living cellular tissue, sometimes as a result of disease or injury, as in the case of inflammation eyeground: the inner side of the back of the eyeball eyestrain: disorder caused by excessive or improper use of the eyes and characterized by fatigue, tearing, redness, and a scratchy feeling in the eyelids eye teeth: the upper canine teeth face lift: rhytidoplasty facial canal: Fallopian canal facial neuralgia: see trigeminal neuralgia facial plasty: rhytidoplasty fainting: brief loss of consciousness

Fallopian canal/facial canal: bony canal in the skull Fallopian tubes: the pair of tubes connecting the ovaries and the uterus, through which the egg must pass at the time of ovulation family therapy: form of group therapy in which the patient group are members of the same family farsightedness/hypermetropia/hyperopia: inability to see nearby objects clearly fascia: fibrous tissue in the form of sheets that connect, surround, and support muscles and organs of the body fascitis: inflammation of the fascia fat: chemical compound forming an important food reserve and a source of hormones, vitamins, and other products essential in metabolism fat pad: mass of fatty tissue FDA: Food and Drug Administration febrile: feverish feces/stool: animal waste discharged following a bowel movement, usually containing indigestible foods, bacteria, bile, and mucus femur: the long bone that supports the thigh; the thigh bone fermentation: the conversion of glucose into ethyl alcohol, especially through the action of an enzyme (zymase) found in yeast fetus: organism developing in the uterus before birth, sometimes considered in the human species to begin with the third month in utero, prior to which is called an embryo fever/pyrexia: body temperature above the normal fever blisters: see cold sores fiberoptic: consisting of or making use of fibers of glass or plastic, as in optical instruments designed for viewing the intestines or stomach fibrillation: irregular, uncoordinated contraction (arrhythmia) of muscle fibers of the heart fibrin: insoluble protein that forms an interlacing network of fibers in clotting blood fibrinogen: complex protein found in plasma which, in combination with the enzyme thrombin, forms fibrin fibrinolysin: enzyme present in the blood that liquefies fibrin, thus dissolving blood clots fibroid: see tumor, fibroid fibroma: benign tumor composed of fibrous connective tissue fibula: the outer of the two bones of the lower leg field block: form of local anesthesia in which the anesthetic is injected into the tissue area in which surgery is to be performed filariasis: tropical disease transmitted by mosquitoes and caused by a parasitic worm that invades the lymphatic system, producing edema and elephantiasis fistula: abnormal channel leading from a hollow organ or cavity to another part or to the surface of the body flaccidity: lack of firmness or elasticity; limpness flatulence: accumulation of gas in the stomach and bowels flexion: state of being bent or flexed flexor: muscle whose function is to flex or bend a part of the body flexure: bend or fold, as in the colon sigmoid floss: see dental floss flu: see influenza fluke: see schistosoma fluoridation: the addition of sodium fluoride to drinking water as a means of preventing tooth decay fluoride: compound of fluorine, often added to public water supplies or toothpastes to retard or prevent tooth decay in children fluoroscope: device for directly observing internal body structures by passing X rays through the patient and projecting shadows on a screen coated with a fluorescent substance fluoroscopy: examination conducted by means of a fluoroscope flu shots: influenza inoculation focal convulsion: epileptic convulsion that affects only one part of the body follicle: small cavity or saclike structure that secretes or excretes body fluids follicle, hair: tiny sac within the dermis from which hair grows and is nourished follicle-stimulating hormone/FSH: hormone secreted at the start of puberty by the pituitary gland, causing maturation of ovaries in girls and formation of sperm in boys follicular cyst: see cyst, follicular fontanel: either of two soft places at juncture points of the skull of a baby, the anterior fontanel, near the front, and the posterior fontanel, near the back food chain: the relationship of organisms considered as food sources or consumers or both, as the relationship of a flowering plant to a bee or to a bird food poisoning: digestive disorder marked by nausea and vomiting, caused by bacteria found in decaying or rancid food food tube: esophagus foot doctor: podiatrist foot drop: condition in which the foot drops when extended in stepping forward, as caused by paralysis of a leg muscle foramen: natural aperture or passage, as in a bone forceps: two-bladed instrument for grasping and compressing or pulling, various types of which are used by dentists and surgeons forces, balance of: see Yin; Yang forensic medicine/forensic pathology: sub-specialty of pathology dealing with the various aspects of medicine and the law forensic pathology: forensic medicine foreskin: the loose skin (prepuce) covering the head of the penis fossa: pit or depression in a surface fovea: shallow rounded depression in the retina, directly in the line of vision at a point where vision is most acute fracture: break in a bone; see closed fracture; complete fracture; incomplete fracture fraternal twins: twins who are not identical, derived from separately fertilized ova freckle: small, brownish or dark-colored spot on the skin free association: psychoanalytic technique in which the patient talks freely about anything that comes to mind freezing of skin: cryosurgery Freud, Sigmund: Austrian neurologist (1856–1939) who founded psychoanalysis and shaped the course of modern psychiatry frigidity: sexual unresponsiveness in women Froehlich's syndrome: failure of secondary sex characteristics to develop in males because of anterior pituitary disease frontal lobe: the front portion of each cerebral hemisphere of the brain, whose functions are uncertain frontal lobotomy: rarely performed surgical operation of cutting into the frontal lobes of the brain to alter behavior frostbite partial freezing of a part of the body, especially of the extremities or ears fructose/levulose: very sweet crystalline sugar FSH: follicle-stimulating hormone fulguration: destruction of tissue, especially malignant growths, by electric cautery functional: 1. able to function, especially in spite of structural defect 2. affecting performance, as in illness, but lacking any verifiable physical basis functional hypertension: hypertension, essential fundus: the rounded base or bottom of any hollow organ fungus (pl., fungi): any of a group of plants including the mushrooms, molds, yeasts, and various microorganisms, some of which cause diseases in human beings funnel chest/pectus excavatum: congenital deformity in which the sternum is depressed furuncle: see boil fusion of spinal joints: see spondylitis, rheumatoid galactosemia: hereditary condition affecting infants who lack an enzyme that converts galactose (a sugar) into glucose in the blood gallbladder/cholecyst: small pear-shaped pouch situated beneath the liver that serves as a reservoir for bile gallstone(s): solid substance formed in the gall bladder that can obstruct the flow of bile and prevent the digestion of fats gamete: either of two mature reproductive cells, an ovum or sperm cell gamma globulin: component of blood serum which contains various antibodies ganglion (pl., ganglia): 1. cluster of nerve cells outside of the central nervous system 2. cyst of a tendon, as on the wrist gangrene: death of tissues in a part of the body, caused by lack of adequate blood supply gastrectomy: surgical removal of all or part of the stomach gastric analysis: extraction and study of gastric juices gastric juice: the acid fluid secreted by the glands lining the stomach, containing several enzymes gastric ulcer: ulcer of the mucous membrane of the stomach gastritis: inflammation of the stomach gastrocnemius: the large muscle at the back of the calf of the leg gastroenteritis: inflammation of the mucous membrane that lines the stomach and intestines gastroenterologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of gastrointestinal disorders gastroenterology: the branch of medical science dealing with the study of the stomach and intestines and the disorders affecting them gastroscope: device that allows inspection of the interior of the stomach gastroscopy: examination of the stomach with a gastroscope GC: see gonorrhea

gene: hereditary unit contained within a chromosome and associated with specific physical characteristics transmitted from parents to offspring general practitioner/GP: physician whose training is not specialized and includes some preparation in pediatrics, surgery, and obstetrics and gynecology, thus enabling him or her to care for an entire family genetic counselor: specialist, usually a physician, who counsels couples on the probability of genetic disorders occurring in their offspring genitalia: genitals genitals/genitalia: the reproductive organs genitourinary tract: urinogenital tract genus: class or category of plants and animals ranking next above the species, as the genus Homo in Homo sapiens geriatrics: branch of medicine dealing with diseases and physiological changes associated with aging and old people German measles: see rubella germicide: disinfectant or other agent capable of killing disease germs gerontology: scientific study of the processes and phenomena of aging gestation: the total period of pregnancy, from conception to birth GI: gastrointestinal gifted: having ability or intelligence above the normal range gigantism/giantism: disorder resulting from oversecretion of somatotrophin by the pituitary gland and resulting in excessive growth gingiva: mucous membrane and soft tissue of the gums surrounding the teeth gingival: pertaining to the gums gingivitis: inflammation of the gum tissues gingivitis, necrotizing ulcerative: see trench mouth GI series/gastrointestinal series: X rays of the esophagus, stomach, and intestines utilizing an opaque substance swallowed by the patient glabrous: without hair gland(s): any of various organs that secrete substances essential to the body or for the elimination of waste products glandular fever: mononucleosis, infectious glaucoma: disease of the eye characterized by increased pressure on the eyeball and leading to the loss of vision if untreated glomeruli (sing., glomerulus): tiny tufts of capillaries in the kidneys through which the blood passes in the filtering of wastes glomerulonephritis: inflammation of the glomeruli glossitis: inflammation of the tongue, characterized by a bright red or glazed appearance glossopharyngeal nerve: the nerve that supplies sensation to the throat and rear of the tongue glottis: the passage between the vocal cords at the upper opening of the larynx glucagon: hormone produced by the islets of Langerhans in the pancreas glucose/blood sugar: sugar found normally in blood and abnormally in urine, as in the case of diabetes mellitus glucose tolerance test/GTT: test that determines the rate at which glucose in the blood is reduced, or metabolized, used as an indicator of chemical diabetes or a prediabetic condition

glucosuria: condition, as diabetes mellitus, in which the urine contains glucose gluten: protein component of wheat and rye gluteus: any of the three muscles that form each buttock glycerol/glycerin: sweet, oily alcohol, one of the components of natural fat glycogen: animal starch usually stored in the liver for conversion to glucose when the body needs energy glycosuria: glucosuria goiter: enlargement of the thyroid gland, often because of a lack of iodine in the diet gonad(s): male or female sex gland; ovary or testicle gonadotrophic hormone/gonadotrophin/gonadotropin: any of three hormones that stimulate the gonads and are secreted by the anterior pituitary gland gonioscope: specialized ophthalmoscope for examining the angle between the cornea and the iris gonococcus: parasitic bacterium that can cause gonorrhea gonorrhea/clap/GC: contagious venereal disease transmitted by sexual contact goof balls (slang): barbiturates gout: metabolic disease characterized by painful inflammation of a joint, as of the big toe, and an excess of uric acid in the blood gouty arthritis, chronic: form of gout characterized by urate deposits and consequent joint stiffness GP: general practitioner Graafian follicles: small sacs in the ovaries that contain the developing ova graft: piece of tissue removed from one organism and inserted in a new site in the same organism or in a different organism grain alcohol: ethyl alcohol grand mal: major epileptic seizure, characterized by falling, loss of consciousness, and spasmodic jerking of the arms and legs granulation: process of forming new tissue in the healing of wounds granulation tissue/proud flesh: new, temporary, vascular tissue formed in a wound as a stage in the healing process, usually soft and moist granulocyte: see neutrophil granulocytic leukemia: see leukemia, granulocytic granuloma: small tumor composed mainly of granulation tissue granuloma inguinale/granuloma venereum: chronic venereal disease that produces lesions in the genital or anal regions grass (slang): marihuana gravid: pregnant
Grawitz's tumor/hypernephroma: malignant tumor of the kidney, found chiefly among men gray matter: cortex greenstick fracture: incomplete fracture, with the bone bending on the unbroken side, more common in children than adults grippe: influenza groin: the fold or depressed area where the thigh joins the abdomen group therapy/group psychotherapy: psychotherapy in which interactions within a group under the direction of a therapist are intended to provoke therapeutic insights and lead to improved social adjustment growth hormone/growth-stimulating hormone/somatotrophin: hormone secreted by the posterior lobe of the pituitary gland that stimulates growth GTT: glucose tolerance test
"guard hairs": vibrissae, nasal gullet: see esophagus gum disease: see periodontal disease gumma: rubbery tumor that develops within organs in the late stages of syphilis gums: see gingiva gurney: stretcher mounted on wheels, commonly used to move nonambulatory patients in hospitals gynecologist: physician specializing in gynecology, often an obstetrician as well gynecology: the branch of medical science that deals with the care and treatment of women and their diseases, especially of the reproductive system

H (slang): heroin hair transplant: the surgical grafting of hair-bearing skin from the back or sides of the scalp onto bald areas of the head halitosis: offensive mouth odor, usually caused by poor oral hygiene hallucinate: have hallucinations hallucination: apparent perception without any corresponding external stimulus hallucinogen: drug or chemical capable of inducing hallucinations hallucinogenic: capable of producing hallucinations halothane: a general anesthetic taken by inhalation hammer/malleus: the outermost of the three ossicles of the middle ear, the bone between the eardrum and the anvil hammer toe: clawlike deformity of a toe hamstrings: any of several tendons at the back of the thigh and controlling the flexing of the knee hangnail: piece of skin partially torn loose from the root or side of a fingernail hangover: headache, nausea, dizziness, and other after-effects of excessive alcoholic consumption, an allergic reaction to alcohol, or emotional stress while drinking Hansen's disease: see leprosy hard palate: see palate, hard hashish: hallucinogenic substance more potent than marihuana, obtained from the leaves and flowers of the Indian hemp plant hatter's disease: chronic mercury poisoning, common among hatters in former times because of their use of mercury in preparing felt hay fever: allergic rhinitis headache: pain or ache across the forehead or within the head heart: hollow muscular structure which maintains the circulation of the blood by alternate contraction and dilation heart block: lack of coordination in the heartbeat of the atria and ventricles, often causing unconsciousness and other symptoms (Stokes-Adams syndrome) heartburn: burning sensation in the lower esophagus caused by a flow of gastric juices from the stomach back into the esophagus heart failure: inability of the heart to pump enough blood to maintain normal circulation heart-lung machine: pumping machine used to divert a patient's blood from the heart during heart surgery and to keep it oxygenated and in circulation heart murmur: abnormal sound heard in the region of the heart heat cramps: muscle spasms resulting from loss of salt due to excessive sweating heat exhaustion/heat prostration: weakness or fainting as a result of prolonged exposure to heat, caused by a decreased blood supply to the heart and brain and an increased supply to the skin heat prostration: heat exhaustion heat rash: prickly heat heatstroke: sunstroke hebephrenic schizophrenia: see schizophrenia, hebephrenic
Heimlich maneuver: emergency treatment for obstruction of the windpipe in which sharp pressure is applied just below the rib cage so that the air in the lungs ejects the obstruction Heine-Medin disease: see poliomyelitis helminth: parasitic worm that invades the intestines, most often via food or water hemal: of or relating to blood hemangioma: reddish, usually raised birthmark consisting of a cluster of small blood vessels near the surface of the skin hematocrit: 1. instrument for measuring the relative amount of plasma and red corpuscles of the blood by centrifuging it (whirling it around to separate parts having different densities) 2. measurement of relative amounts of plasma and red corpuscles by a hematocrit hematologist: physician specializing in the study of the blood and in the diagnosis and treatment of blood diseases hematology: the branch of medical science dealing with the blood, including its formation, functions, and diseases hematoma: blood tumor hematoma, subdural: mass of blood clots or partially clotted blood in the space beneath the outermost (dura mater) and middle (arachnoid) membranes covering the brain

hematuria: blood in the urine hemiplegia: paralysis of one side of the body, involving both the arm and leg hemiplegic: one affected by hemiplegia hemodialysis: see dialysis hemoglobin: pigment of red blood corpuscles serving as the carrier of oxygen and carbon dioxide hemophilia: inherited disorder characterized by an incapacity of the blood to clot normally, thus resulting in profuse bleeding even from slight cuts, typically affecting males only hemophiliac/bleeder: one afflicted with hemophilia hemorrhage: discharge of blood from a ruptured blood vessel hemorrhoidal: 1. of or pertaining to the blood vessels in the rectal area 2. of or pertaining to hemorrhoids hemorrhoidectomy: surgical removal of hemorrhoids hemorrhoids/piles: swollen varicose veins in the rectal mucous membrane hemorrhoids, prolapsed: hemorrhoids that protrude from the anus hemotoxic: (of certain poisonous snakes) transmitting venom that is carried by the bloodstream of the toxified animal Henle's loop: U-shaped part of a tubule of the kidney heparin: chemical compound that prevents coagulation of the blood hepatic: of or relating to the liver hepaticologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of liver diseases hepaticology: branch of medical science concerned with the study, diagnosis, and treatment of diseases of the liver hepatitis: inflammation of the liver hepatitis, infectious: inflammation of the liver caused by a viral infection usually transmitted by food and water contaminated by feces from an infected person hepatitis, serum: form of infectious hepatitis usually spread by blood transfusions or by infected hypodermic needles hereditary: acquired through one's genetic makeup by inheritance, as physical characteristics, disease, etc.
hernia/rupture: protrusion of an organ or part, as the intestine, through the wall or body cavity that normally contains it hernia, hiatus/diaphragmatic hernia: hernia in which the lower end of the esophagus or stomach protrudes through the diaphragm hernia, inguinal: protuberance of part of the intestine into the inguinal region (near the groin) hernia, strangulated: hernia that has become tightly constricted, thus cutting off blood supply hernia, umbilical: hernia in which an abdominal part protrudes through the abdominal wall at the navel herniate: slip away from its proper position as an organ or part to form a hernia herniating disk: slipped disk herniation: forming of a hernia heroic: extraordinary or extreme, as measures undertaken when life is in immediate danger heroin/diacetylmorphine: addictive narcotic drug derived from morphine, illegal in the United States herpes: any of various acute viral diseases characterized by the eruption of small blisters on the skin and mucous membranes herpes simplex: virus that causes cold sores and other skin conditions in humans herpes simplex, Type 1/HSV-1: variety of herpes simplex that causes cold sores herpes simplex, Type 2/HSV-2: variety of herpes simplex that often affects the genital region and can result in congenital damage to the baby of an infected mother heterograft/xenograft: tissue graft taken for transplanting from a donor of a different species from that of the patient receiving it hexachlorophene: antibacterial agent used in some soaps hiatus hernia: see hernia hiccup/hiccough: involuntary, spasmodic grunt caused by spasms of the diaphragm and the abrupt closure of the glottis high (slang): amphetamine high blood pressure: see hypertension hip bone: ilium hip joint: acetabulum hirsutism: abnormal or excessive hairiness, especially in women histamine: substance found in animal tissues that can cause allergic symptoms when allergens stimulate the body to produce it in large amounts histoincompatibility: incompatibility between tissues, as between the tissues of a patient and the tissues of a transplanted organ or part histoplasma: fungus that can cause histoplasmosis histoplasmosis: chronic fungus disease of the lungs hives/urticaria: skin condition marked by large, irregularly shaped swellings that burn and itch Hodgkin's disease: disease of the lymph system, characterized by chronic, progressive enlargement of the lymph nodes, lymphoid tissue, and spleen homeopathy: system of medicine in which disease is treated by administering minute doses of medicine that would in a healthy person produce the symptoms of the disease treated homeostasis: maintenance of uniform physiological stability within an organism and between its parts homograft/allograft: tissue graft taken for transplanting from a donor of the same species as the patient receiving it hookworm: parasitic intestinal worm whose larvae usually enter the body by penetrating the skin of the feet of people who go barefooted hormone: internal secretion released in minute amounts into the bloodstream by one of the endocrine glands or other tissue and stimulating a specific physiological activity horny layer of epidermis: stratum corneum horse (slang): heroin housemaid's knee: chronic inflammation of the bursa in front of the knee resulting from pressure from constant kneeling or injury
HSV-1: see herpes simplex, Type 1
HSV-2: see herpes simplex, Type 2
HTLV-3: see human T-cell leukemia virus (HTLV)
Hubbard tank: large, specially designed tub in which a patient may be immersed in water for exercises as a means of physical therapy humerus: the long bone of the arm from elbow to shoulder humpback, hunchback: kyphosis hyaline membrane disease/respiratory distress syndrome: disease of newborn babies characterized by severe respiratory distress caused by the presence of a membrane lining the alveoli of the lungs hydatidiform mole: benign tumor formed from a placenta that has degenerated into a mass of grapelike cysts hydrocele: localized accumulation of fluid, especially surrounding the testicles in the scrotum hydrocephalus: accumulation of cerebrospinal fluid within the brain hydrochloric acid: colorless, corrosive acid which in dilute form is present in gastric juice hydrogenation: the subjection of a material to hydrogen, as the process by which unsaturated fats are solidified hydronephrosis: enlargement of the kidneys with urine because of an obstruction of the ureter hydrophilic: having an affinity for water, as the soft contact lens hydrophilic lenses: contact lenses, soft plastic hydrophobia: rabies hydrotherapy: treatment of disease by the use of water hymen: thin membrane usually partially covering the entrance of the vagina in virgins hyperactive child: see hyperkinesis hyperacusis: abnormal and sometimes painful acuteness of hearing hyperaldosteronism: syndrome of muscle weakness, hypertension, and excessive excretion of urine, because of oversecretion of an adrenal hormone hyperbaric: of or using pressures in excess of the usual pressure of the atmosphere, as a chamber for treating one suffering from decompression sickness hyperfunction: disorder of an endocrine gland, characterized by excess secretion of a hormone hyperglycemia: abnormally high amount of sugar in the blood hyperkinesis: behavioral disorder of children marked by overactivity, excitability, and inability to concentrate hyperkinetic: suffering from or pertaining to hyperkinesis hypermetropia: see farsightedness hypermetropic: farsighted hypernephroma: see Grawitz's tumor hyperopia: see farsightedness hyperopic: farsighted hyperplasia: excessive production of cells, resulting in enlargement of tissue or of an organ hyperplastic: characterized by hyperplasia hypersensitivity: unusual sensitivity or allergic response to a particular substance hypertension/high blood pressure: excessively high blood pressure, sometimes caused by a disease (secondary hypertension) and sometimes not (essential hypertension) hypertension, chronic: essential hypertension hypertension, essential/chronic/functional: hypertension that is not a symptom of disease and has no known cause hypertension, malignant: form of essential hypertension with an acute onset and rapid rise in pressure hypertension, secondary: hypertension arising as a consequence of another known disorder hypertensive heart disease: see heart disease, hypertensive hyperthyroidism: abnormal and excess activity of the thyroid gland, resulting in oversecretion of thyroxin and an abnormally high metabolism, characterized by fatigue, weight loss, rapid pulse, intolerance to heat, and sometimes by protruding eyes (in which case the disorder is called exophthalmic goiter) hypertonic: characterized by an abnormally high degree of tension, as muscle hypertrophic: characterized by hypertrophy hypertrophic arthritis: see osteoarthritis hypertrophy: excessive development of an organ or tissue because of enlargement of the size of its constituent cells hyperventilation: abnormally fast or deep breathing, resulting in loss of carbon dioxide from the blood and sometimes causing dizziness and muscle spasms hypnotic: tending to produce sleep hypoallergenic: less likely to produce an allergic reaction hypochondria: extreme anxiety about one's health, usually associated with a particular part of the body and accompanied by imagined symptoms of illness hypochondriac: 1. (n.) one suffering from hypochondria 2. (adj.) pertaining to the upper right or left parts of the abdomen hypodermic: pertaining to the tissue just under the skin or to an injection made under the skin hypofunction: disorder of an endocrine gland, characterized by too little secretion of a hormone hypogastric: pertaining to the lower middle part of the abdomen hypogastrium: the lower middle (hypogastric) part of the abdomen hypoglycemia/low blood sugar: abnormally small amount of glucose in the blood, which can lead to insulin shock hypoglycemic drug: drug intended to reduce the amount of glucose in the blood by stimulating the release of insulin from the pancreas hypophysis: see pituitary gland hypophysis cerebri: pituitary gland hyposensitization: program for desensitizing allergy patients by injecting them with progressively larger doses of pollen or other allergens to build tolerance levels hypotension: excessively low blood pressure hypothalamus: region of the brain below the thalamus, important in regulating the internal organs and associated with the functioning of the pituitary gland hypothermia: artificially low body temperature produced by gradually cooling blood, used to slow metabolism and reduce tissue oxygen need so that heart and brain can withstand short periods of interrupted blood flow during surgery hypothyroidism: deficient functioning of the thyroid gland, resulting in undersecretion of thyroxin and an abnormally low metabolism, characterized by lack of energy, thick skin, and intolerance to cold hypotonic: characterized by an abnormally low degree of tension, as muscle hysterectomy: surgical procedure in which the uterus is completely removed hysterectomy, radical: surgical removal of the uterus, cervix, ovaries, and Fallopian tubes hysterectomy, total: surgical removal of the uterus and cervix hysteria: neurotic condition characterized by impulsive, demonstrative, and attention-getting behavior and sometimes by symptoms of organic disorders hysteria, conversion: see conversion reaction hysterogram: X-ray examination of the uterus and surrounding areas

id: the concealed, inaccessible part of the mind, the seat of impulses that tend to fulfill instinctual needs identical twins: twins having the same genetic makeup, derived from a single fertilized egg identification: mental process, often unconscious, by which a person associates with himself the attributes of another with whom he has formed an emotional tie idiopathic: (of diseases) originating spontaneously or of unknown cause ileitis: inflammation of the ileum of the small intestine ileocecal valve: the valve between the ileum of the small intestine and the cecum, the first section of the large intestine ileum: the last section of the small intestine, following the jejunum and leading to the large intestine iliac: pertaining to or near the ilium ilium: the large upper portion of the hip bone immune: protected from a communicable or allergic disease by the presence of antibodies in the blood immunity: resistance to infection or lack of susceptibility of an organism to a disease or poison to which its species is usually subject, either by means of antibodies produced by the organism itself (active immunity) or by another and subsequently introduced into its body (passive immunity), as by injection immunization: act or process of making immune, especially by inoculation immunize: make immune, as by inoculation immunoglobulin: any of various proteins of the body that are active as antigens or otherwise contribute to the formation of antibodies immunologist: physician or specialist in the study of immunity immunology: the branch of medical science concerned with the phenomena and techniques of immunity from disease immunosuppressive: acting to suppress natural immune responses, as to foreign tissue in an organ transplant immunotherapy: therapy to relieve allergic response consisting of a series of injections of a dilute allergen, gradually increased in strength impacted tooth: tooth wedged between the jawbone and another tooth so as to prevent its eruption impaction: state of being firmly packed or tightly wedged, as feces in the rectum or a tooth in the jaw; see impacted tooth imperforate: lacking a normal opening impetigo: contagious bacterial skin infection characterized by blisters that break and form yellow encrusted areas impotence: in men, the inability to have sexual intercourse incision: 1. cut or gash, as of a wound 2. cut or slit made in a surgical operation incisor: one of the four upper and four lower cutting teeth near the front of the mouth incompetence: inadequate performance, as of the heart valves incomplete fracture: partial fracture of a bone in which continuity of the bone is not destroyed incontinence: inability to control the flow of urine or the evacuation of the bowels incubation period: the period between the entry of a disease-causing organism in the body and the onset of the symptoms of that disease incus: anvil

indomethacin: analgesic and anti-inflammatory drug used for arthritic disorders, often as a substitute for aspirin infantile paralysis: see poliomyelitis infantile sexuality: the sexual interest and pleasure that infants and young children take in their genitals and other body parts infarct: tissue rendered necrotic (dead) by an obstructed blood supply, as because of a thrombus (clot) or an embolus infarction: death of tissue because of deprivation of blood caused by an obstruction, as in a coronary thrombosis (heart attack) infection(s): communication of disease by entrance into the body of disease-causing organisms infectious: (of a disease) transmitted by organisms, as bacteria infectious mononucleosis/glandular fever/kissing disease: acute communicable disease marked by fever, malaise, and swollen lymph nodes, especially in the throat inferior vena cava: the large vein that brings blood from the lower part of the body to the heart infertility: inability to conceive or to produce offspring inflammation: localized reaction to infection, injury, etc., characterized by heat, redness, swelling, and pain inflammation of arterial walls: arteritis inflammation of bladder: cystitis inflammation of bone: osteomyelitis inflammation of brain: encephalitis inflammation of brain coverings: meningitis inflammation of bursa: bursitis inflammation of femoral head: Legg-Perthes' disease inflammation of glomeruli: nephritis inflammation of gums: gingivitis inflammation of joints: arthritis inflammation of larynx: laryngitis inflammation of liver: hepatitis inflammation of mucous membrane: laryngitis inflammation of prostate: prostatitis inflammation of skin: dermatitis inflammation of spinal joints: spondylitis, rheumatoid inflammation of stomach lining: gastritis inflammation of tendons: tendinitis inflammation of tendon sheath: tenosynovitis inflammation of tongue: glossitis inflammation of veins: phlebitis inflammation of vertebrae: osteomyelitis, spinal influenza/flu/grippe: acute, contagious, sometimes epidemic disease caused by a virus and characterized by inflammation of the upper respiratory tract, fever, chills, muscle ache, and fatigue ingrown toenail: toenail that has grown into the surrounding flesh inguinal: pertaining to or near the groin inguinal hernia: see hernia inner ear: the innermost part of the ear, containing the essential organs of hearing within the cochlea, the auditory nerve, and the semicircular canals that govern equilibrium innervation: distribution or supply of nerves to a part inoculate: immunize by administering a serum or vaccine to 2. introduce microorganisms into (a culture medium) inoculation: act or process of inoculating inoperable: characterized by a condition that excludes surgery as a course of treatment in situ: in its original site or position insomnia: chronic inability to sleep insufficiency: inability to function adequately, as the heart (cardiac insufficiency) insufflation: tubal insufflation insulin: protein hormone secreted by the islets of Langerhans in the pancreas that checks the accumulation of glucose in the blood and promotes the utilization of sugar in the treatment of diabetes insulin shock: condition caused by too low a level of blood sugar, and characterized by sweating, dizziness, palpitation, shallow breathing, confusion, and ultimately loss of consciousness insulin shock therapy: former method of treating psychotic patients involving large injections of insulin, inducing coma insult: injury to tissue caused by stress or trauma integument: skin intelligence quotient/IQ: a score obtained from standardized tests indicating the level of a person's intelligence intensive care unit (ICU): section of a hospital specially equipped and staffed to monitor the vital systems of patients and provide close, round-the-clock care for a relatively brief period, as for patients just removed from surgery or for those in an unstable or critical condition intercostal muscles: the muscles between each of the ribs that contract when air is exhaled intercourse: sexual intercourse intermittent claudication: vascular disease associated with aging and marked by muscle fatigue and pain, especially in the legs, due to atherosclerosis intern: advanced medical student or graduate (M.D.) undergoing resident training in a hospital internal medicine: the branch of medical science that deals with the study, diagnosis, and nonsurgical treatment of diseases of the internal organs internist: physician specializing in internal medicine interstitial calcinosis: condition characterized by deposits of calcium salts in the skin and subcutaneous tissue intestine(s): tubular part of the alimentary canal, linking the stomach to the anus intestine, large: the lower part of the intestine, of greater diameter than the small intestine and divided into the cecum, colon, and rectum intestine, small: the convoluted upper and narrower part of the intestines, where most nutrients are absorbed by the bloodstream, between the pylorus and the cecum, divided into three parts, the duodenum, jejunum, and ileum intoxicated: in legal use, having more than 0.10% alcohol in the bloodstream intracutaneous: within the dermis intramuscular: situated within or injected into a muscle or muscular tissue intrauterine device/IUD: contraceptive device consisting usually of a plastic coil, spiral, or loop that is inserted and left within the uterus for as long as contraception is desired intravenous: into or within a vein, as an injection intrinsic: originating or situated within an organ or part, as a disease introitus: entrance into a body cavity, especially into the vagina intussusception: the turning inward or inversion of a portion of the intestine into an adjacent part, thus obstructing it, found especially in male infants in utero: in the uterus, prior to birth invasive: invading or spreading to tissues other than at the place of origin: said of malignant growths involutional melancholia: see depressive reaction IQ: intelligence quotient iris: colored, circular, contractile membrane between the cornea and the lens of the eye, whose central perforation is occupied by the pupil irradiation: process of exposing a part of the body to radiant energy, as X rays irrigate: wash out or cleanse, as a body cavity or a wound, with a flow of water or other liquid irrigation: act or process of irrigating a body cavity, wound, etc.
ischemia: localized deficiency of blood, as from a contracted blood vessel ischium: the part of the hip bone on which the body rests when sitting islands of Langerhans: islets of Langerhans islets of Langerhans/islands of Langerhans: small, cellular masses in the pancreas which produce and secrete insulin isomer: compound with the same molecular weight and formula as another, but with a different arrangement of its atoms, resulting in different properties isometrics: means of strengthening muscles by forcefully contracting them against immovable resistance isoniazid/INH: isonicotinic acid hydrazide, a chemical compound used in the treatment of tuberculosis isopropyl: chemical in the family of methyl alcohol, used as a rubbing alcohol itch, the: scabies

IUD: intrauterine device

Jacksonian epilepsy: form of epilepsy characterized by recurrent focal seizures, spasmodic movements or tingling or burning sensations, as of an arm, leg, or facial area, caused by a condition affecting a motor area of the brain Jacksonian seizure: form of focal seizure that characterizes Jacksonian epilepsy jaundice: yellowish tint to the skin and tissues, as the whites of the eyes, caused by excessive bile in the blood, a symptom of certain disorders jejunum: the middle section of the small intestine, between the duodenum and the ileum joint(s): place where two or more bones or separate parts of the skeleton meet junk (slang): heroin juvenile rheumatoid arthritis: see rheumatoid arthritis, juvenile kala-azar/black fever/dumdum fever/visceral leishmaniasis: form of leishmaniasis that is usually fatal if not treated keratin: horny substance that is the main constituent of nails and hair, and in nonhuman animals of claws and horns keratosis: disease of the skin characterized by an outer layer of horny tissue ketone bodies: organic compounds that are a by-product of fat metabolism kidney: one of a pair of organs located at the rear of the abdomen near the base of the spine, whose function is to filter the fluid portion of the blood in regulating the composition and volume of body fluids, and to dispose of waste in the form of urine kidney failure, acute: sudden loss of kidney function, characterized by decreased amount of urine, passage of bloody urine, edema, fatigue, and loss of appetite kidney stone/renal calculus: mass of hard material, such as crystallized salt, that may collect within the kidney and obstruct the flow of urine kissing disease: infectious mononucleosis kyphosis: backward curvature of the spine characterized as a humpback or hunchback labia: 1. pl. of labium 2. the folds of skin and mucous membrane of the vulva, consisting of the outer folds (labia majora) and the inner folds (labia minora) labium: 1. sing. of labia 2. lip or liplike part or organ labor: process of giving birth, during which the uterus undergoes periodic contractions in moving the fetus through the birth canal labyrinth: the winding passages of the inner ear labyrinthitis: inflammation of the labyrinth of the inner ear, usually disturbing the sense of equilibrium laceration: wound made by tearing or ripping lacrimal gland: tear-producing gland over the eye lactation: formation or secretion of milk from the breast lactic acid: bitter, syrupy acid found in sour milk and collected in muscle tissues during anaerobic exercise lactogenic hormone/LTH/luteotrophic hormone/luteotrophin/luteotropin/prolactin: hormone secreted by the anterior lobe of the pituitary gland that stimulates the production of milk in the mammary glands Lamaze, Dr. Ferdinand: French physician who pioneered in the development of a natural childbirth technique Langerhans: islets of Langerhans laparotomy: surgical procedure for examining or treating the female reproductive organs within the abdominal cavity lapse attack or seizure: see petit mal laryngectomy: surgical removal of all or part of the larynx laryngitis: inflammation of the mucous membranes of the larynx, causing the voice to become hoarse or disappear altogether laryngitis, chronic: permanently hoarse voice resulting from thickened, toughened mucous membrane in the larynx, resulting from too many attacks of laryngitis laryngologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of disorders of the throat laryngology: the branch of medical science concerned with the study and treatment of the throat and related areas laryngoscope: instrument for inspecting the larynx larynx/voice box: the organ of voice in humans and most other vertebrates, consisting of a cartilaginous box in the upper part of the trachea across which are stretched vocal cords whose vibrations produce sound latent: not visible or apparent, as symptoms of a disease at an early stage lateral: 1. relating to or directed toward the side 2. more distant from the midline of the body, as compared to a nearer (medial) position lavage: cleansing or washing out of an organ, as the stomach laxative: substance that has the power to loosen the bowels, as milk of magnesia L-dopa/levodopa: medicine used in treating the symptoms of Parkinson's disease leaflet: flap of a heart valve learning disability: condition in which a child cannot acquire certain skills or assimilate certain kinds of knowledge at or near the normal rate Legg-Perthes' disease: inflammation of the bone and cartilage in the head of the femur (thigh bone) leiomyoma: benign tumor consisting of smooth muscle tissue leishmaniasis: tropical disease resembling malaria in which an animal parasite is transmitted by the sandfly leishmaniasis, visceral: see kala-azar lens: biconvex transparent body behind the iris of the eye that focuses entering light rays on the retina lepromatous: characterized by nodular skin lesions, as a form of leprosy leprosy/Hansen's disease: chronic bacterial disease characterized by skin lesions, nerve paralysis, and physical deformity lesion: any abnormal change in an organ or tissue caused by disease or injury leukemia: form of cancer involving the blood and blood-making tissues, characterized by a marked and persistent excess of leukocytes leukemia, granulocytic: form of leukemia characterized by predominance of granulocytes (or neutrophils) leukemia, lymphocytic: form of leukemia characterized by uncontrolled over-activity of the lymphoid tissue leukemic: of or characteristic of leukemia leukocyte/white blood cell/white corpuscle: white or colorless cell found in the bloodstream important in providing protection against infection leukopenia: abnormal reduction in the number of leukocytes in the blood leukorrhea: whitish, viscid discharge from the vagina levodopa: medicine used in treating the symptoms of Parkinson's disease levulose: fructose

LGV: see lymphogranuloma venereum LH: luteinizing hormone
libido: the instinctual craving or drive behind all human activities, especially sexual, the repression of which leads to neurosis Librium: chlordiazepoxide lidocaine: chemical used as a local anesthetic ligament(s): band of tough, fibrous connective tissue that binds together bones and provides support for organs ligate: tie or close off with a ligature ligation: the act of tying or binding up, as an artery ligature: thread, wire, etc., used to close off or tie a vessel lightening: during the last few weeks of pregnancy, a shift in fetal pressure from the upper abdomen to the pelvic region as the head of the fetus moves toward the birth canal lipase: enzyme that breaks down fats lipid: fatty substance essential to living cells lipid storage disease: any of various usually fatal diseases, typically occurring in childhood, caused by the lack of a particular enzyme lip reading/speech reading: interpretation of speech by watching the position of the lips and mouth of the speaker, practiced especially by the deaf lithium salts: salts of lithium (a metal), used as a medication in the treatment of manic-depressive psychosis lithotomy position: position used in gynecological examinations in which the patient lies on her back and the legs are drawn back and apart at the thighs liver: large, glandular organ situated just under the diaphragm on the right side, that processes blood and regulates its composition, as by storing sugar and releasing it in assimilable form (glucose), and that secretes bile liver spots/chloasma: yellowish brown patches that appear on the skin lobe(s): rounded or protruding section or subdivision, as of an organ lobotomy: see frontal lobotomy lockjaw: see tetanus locomotor ataxia: see tabes dorsalis loiasis: form of filariasis transmitted by a biting fly from monkey to man or vice versa loins: the part of the body between the lower rib and the hip bone lordosis: abnormal inward curvature of the spine lordotic posture: posture characteristic of some women in late pregnancy, in which the shoulders are slumped, the neck bent, and the lower spine curved forward to bear the weight of the fetus Lou Gehrig's disease: sclerosis, amyolotrophic lateral low blood sugar: hypoglycemia

LSD/lysergic acid diethylamide: colorless, odorless, tasteless drug produced synthetically that causes the user to experience hallucinations
LTH: lactogenic hormone lumbago: pain in the lower back lumbar: pertaining to or situated near the loins lumbar puncture: see spinal tap lumen: space enclosed by the walls of a blood vessel, duct, etc.
lung: either of two porous organs of respiration in the chest cavity of humans, having the function of absorbing oxygen and discharging carbon dioxide lunula: the living part of the nail, the pale, half-moon shape at the nail base luteinizing hormone/LH: a hormone secreted by the anterior lobe of the pituitary gland that stimulates a Graafian follicle to release an ovum during each menstrual cycle and converts the follicle into corpus luteum luteotrophic hormone: lactogenic hormone luteotrophin: lactogenic hormone lymph: transparent fluid resembling blood plasma that is conveyed through vessels (lymphatic vessels) and lubricates the tissues lymphangiogram: the visualization by X ray of lymph nodes after injection of an opaque fluid lymphatic: pertaining to or conveying lymph lymph gland: see lymph node lymph node/lymph gland: one of the rounded bodies about the size of a pea, found in the course of the lymphatic vessels, that produces lymphocytes lymphoblast: young cell that matures into a lymphocyte lymphocyte: variety of leukocyte formed in the lymphoid tissue lymphogranuloma inguinale: see lymphogranuloma venereum lymphogranuloma venereum/LGV/lymphogranuloma inguinale: venereal disease affecting the lymph nodes lymphoid: pertaining to lymph or to the tissue of lymph nodes lymphoma: abnormal (neoplastic) growth of lymphoid tissue, symptomatic of various diseases, as lymphocytic leukemia or Hodgkin's disease lymphosarcoma: malignant growth of the lymphatic system lysergic acid diethylamide: LSD lysozyme: enzyme present in tears that is destructive to bacteria lyssophobia: fear of becoming insane

M (slang): morphine macrobiotic: of or pertaining to macrobiotics macrobiotics: the idea, Oriental in origin, that an equilibrium should be maintained between foods that make one active (Yang) and foods that make one relax (Yin) macrocephalic: individual with macrocephaly macrocephaly: excessive head size macula: spot or discoloration macula lutea: yellowish area in the retina related to color perception and marked by most acute vision mainlining: injection of heroin directly into a vein malabsorption syndrome/celiac disease: syndrome characterized by bulky, foul-smelling stools and other symptoms resulting from the inability of the body to absorb certain nutrients from the intestinal tract malaise: feeling of being run-down, listless, uncomfortable, weary, and generally unwell malaria: disease caused by certain animal parasites transmitted by the bite of the infected Anopheles mosquito, causing intermittent chills, and fever malignancy: 1. malignant tumor 2. state of being malignant malignant: so aggravated as to threaten life, usually resistant to treatment, and often having the property of uncontrolled growth, as a cancer malleus: hammer malnutrition: nutritional deficiency, as of essential proteins, vitamins, or minerals, causing impairment of health and certain specific diseases malocclusion: faulty closure of the upper and lower teeth Malta fever: see brucellosis mammogram: X-ray picture of the breast by the technique of mammography mammography: specialized X-ray examination of the breasts mammoplasty: surgical procedure to augment the size of the breasts mandible: the lower jawbone mania: psychotic condition characterized by excessive activity, elation, extreme talkativeness, and agitation manic-depressive reaction/affective reaction: psychosis characterized by mania or depression or by the alternation of both marihuana: the dried leaves and flowers of the hemp plant (Cannabis sativa), which if smoked in cigarettes or otherwise ingested can produce distorted perception and other hallucinogenic effects marrow: either of two types of soft, vascular tissue found in the central cavities of bones—red marrow, which produces red blood cells, and yellow marrow, composed mainly of fat cells mastectomy: surgical removal of the breast mastectomy, radical: surgical removal of the breast, underlying chest muscles, and lymph glands in the armpit mastectomy, simple: surgical removal of the breast only master gland: pituitary gland mastitis: inflammation of the breast mastoiditis: inflammation of the air cells in the mastoid process mastoid process: process of the temporal bone behind the ear mastoplasty: surgical procedure to reduce the size of the breasts masturbation: the touching or rubbing of the genitals for sexual pleasure and usually orgasm materia alba: white, viscous mixture of mucus, molds, tissue cells, and bacteria adhering to teeth or to the spaces between teeth and gums, a potential source of disease maxilla: the upper jawbone maxillary sinus: see paranasal sinus MBD: see minimal brain dysfunction MD: see muscular dystrophy
M.D.: Doctor of Medicine measles/rubeola: contagious viral disease, especially of children, marked by rash, fever, and conjunctivitis, sometimes having severe complications measles, German: see rubella meatus: passage or canal in the human body, especially one with an external opening such as the anterior urethra of the penis medial: 1. middle, or relatively near the middle 2. nearer to the midline of the body, as compared to a more distant (lateral) position medical: 1. of or relating to medicine 2. of or relating to the treatment of disease by nonsurgical means medical history: the questions asked by a doctor of a patient that are designed to give an outline of the patient's state of health medicine: 1. the profession dealing with the maintenance of health and the treatment of physical and psychological disorders 2. the treatment of disease by nonsurgical means medulla: 1. medulla oblongata: the lower part of the brain continuous with the spinal cord that controls certain involuntary processes such as breathing, swallowing, and blood circulation 2. the inner portion of an organ or part, as of the kidneys or the adrenal glands melancholia, involutional: see depressive reaction melanin: dark brown or black pigment of the skin melanin cell clusters: see moles melanoma/black cancer: malignant tumor formed of cells that produce melanin menarche: the first menstrual period of a girl

Ménière's disease/Ménière's syndrome: symptoms including vertigo, ringing or buzzing sensations (tinnitus), nausea, and vomiting, associated with disease of the inner ear and often leading to progressive deafness of one ear Ménière's syndrome: see Ménière's disease meninges: the membranes that cover the brain and spinal cord meningioma: uncontrolled new cell growth in one of the membranes (arachnoid) covering the brain and spinal cord meningitis: inflammation of the membranes that cover the brain and spinal cord meningitis, aseptic/viral: meningitis thought to be caused by a virus instead of a bacterium meningococcal: pertaining to meningococcus, a bacterium meningococcus: bacterium that causes a form of meningitis menopausal: of or occurring during the menopause menopause/change of life/climacteric: the cessation of menstruation and the end of a woman's capacity to bear children, normally occurring between 40–50 years of age and often marked by hot flashes, dizzy spells, and other physical and emotional symptoms menopause, surgical: abrupt onset of menopause in women resulting from the surgical removal of the uterus and ovaries menses: menstruation menstrual: of or relating to menstruation menstruation/the menses: periodic bloody discharge of the unfertilized ovum and tissue from the uterus of a female of child-bearing age mental retardation: failure in mental development that is severe enough to prevent normal participation in everyday life mentoplasty: plastic surgery of the chin, especially a procedure to build up an underdeveloped chin meperidine/pethidine/Demerol: medicine used as an analgesic and sedative meprobamate/Equanil/Miltown: tranquilizer used as a sedative and muscle relaxant mescaline: chemical extracted from the peyote cactus that induces hallucinations in its users mesentery: the fan-shaped fold of the membrane (peritoneum) that enfolds the small intestine and connects it with the abdominal wall mesoderm: middle layer of tissue metabolic: of or relating to metabolism metabolism: aggregate of all physical and chemical processes continuously taking place in living organisms, including those which build up and break down assimilated materials metacarpal: any of the five bones of the metacarpus metacarpus: the five bones of the hand connecting the wrist to the fingers (phalanges) metastasis: the transfer of a disease or its manifestations, as a malignant tumor, from one part of the body to another metatarsalgia: painful inflammation of the nerves in the region of the metatarsus of the foot metatarsals: the bones of the metatarsus metatarsus: the fine bones of the foot connecting the ankle to the toes (phalanges) methadone/Dolophine: synthetic opiate used as an analgesic and experimentally as a substitute for heroin in the treatment of addicts methamphetamine/Methedrine/Desoxyn: chemical compound that allays hunger and has a more stimulating effect on the central nervous system than does amphetamine or dextroamphetamine methanol: methyl alcohol Methedrine: methamphetamine (meth-head) methotrexate: drug used in the treatment of psoriasis and leukemia methyl alcohol/wood alcohol/methanol: flammable liquid obtained through the distillation of wood or made synthetically, poisonous if taken internally metorrhagia: erratic or unpredictable menstrual bleeding microcephalic: individual with microcephaly microcephaly: abnormal smallness of the head, with imperfect development of the cranium micrographia: very minute handwriting, a symptom of some nervous disorders micron: 1/1000th of a millimeter (symbol mu, Greek letter mu) microsurgery: surgery or dissection of minute parts, as of individual cells, with the aid of a microscope and especially precise instruments micturate: urinate micturition: urination middle ear: the part of the ear between the eardrum and the inner ear, including the tympanum and the ossicles—hammer, anvil, and stirrup migraine/sick headache: recurrent severe form of headache, temporarily disabling, usually affecting one side of the head and often accompanied by nausea, dizziness, and sensitivity to light miliaria: prickly heat milk teeth: baby teeth Miltown: meprobamate mineral(s): naturally occurring, homogeneous, inorganic material, some of which, as salt and iron, are required by the body minimal brain dysfunction/minimal brain damage: condition of children who suffer from a motor or perceptual impairment because of slight brain damage miscarriage/spontaneous abortion: the involuntary expulsion of a nonviable fetus after the first three months of pregnancy Miss Emma (slang): morphine mitral valve: the membranous valve between the left atrium and left ventricle of the heart that prevents the backflow of blood into the atrium mittelschmerz: pain during ovulation about midway between menstrual periods modality: 1. method of treatment or its application, especially a physical procedure 2. any form of sensation, as touch or taste molar: any of the three upper and three lower grinding teeth with flattened crowns at both sides of the rear of the mouth, making 12 in all mole: permanent pigmented spot on the skin, usually brown and often raised molluscum contagiosum: contagious viral disease marked by raised lesions containing waxy material Mongolism: congenital disorder characterized by mental retardation moniliasis/candidiasis: fungus infection involving the skin or mucous membranes of various parts of the body, such as the mouth, especially in babies (when it is called thrush) or the vagina monocyte: relatively large leukocyte mononucleosis: infectious mononucleosis monovalent: pertaining to a form of the Sabin polio vaccine in which each dose gives protection against a different strain of polio morning sickness: nausea and vomiting experienced by some pregnant women in the morning hours, especially in early pregnancy morphine: addictive narcotic drug derived from opium, used medically to relieve pain morphinism: abnormal condition of the body system caused by an excessive dose or habitual use of morphine Morton's toe: painful inflammation of the nerves in the region of the metatarsus of the foot (metatarsalgia) between the third and fourth toes motion sickness: nausea and sometimes vomiting caused by the effect of certain complex movements on the organ of balance in the inner ear, typically experienced in a moving vehicle, ship, or airplane motor nerve/efferent nerve: nerve that conveys information from the central nervous system to a muscle with a directive for action mouth-to-mouth respiration/mouth-to-mouth resuscitation: form of artificial respiration in which the rescuer places his or her mouth over the victim's mouth and breathes rhythmically and forcefully to inflate the victim's lungs and start respiration

MS: multiple sclerosis mu: micron

mucosa: mucous membrane

mucosal: of or pertaining to the mucous membrane mucous: pertaining to, producing, or resembling mucus mucous membrane/mucosa: membrane that lines many of the body's inner surfaces, kept moist by glandular secretions mucus: viscous substance secreted by the mucous membranes multipara: woman who has borne more than one child multiphasic: having many phases or aspects; said especially of testing performed in the course of a comprehensive physical examination multiple myeloma: malignant tumor of the bone marrow occurring at numerous sites multiple sclerosis/MS: chronic disease in which patches of nerve tissue thicken (sclerose), causing failure of coordination and other nervous and mental symptoms

mumps: contagious, viral disease marked by fever and swelling of the facial glands muscular dystrophy/MD: any of various diseases of unknown cause characterized by the progressive wasting away (atrophy) of the muscles musculoskeletal system: the human body's network of muscles and bones myasthenia gravis: chronic disease characterized by muscular weakness and general and progressive exhaustion mycobacterium: kind of rod-shaped, aerobic bacterium myelin: semisolid fatlike sheath that surrounds the axon of a neuron myelitis: 1. inflammation of the spinal cord 2. inflammation of the bone marrow

myelogram: X ray of the spinal cord obtained by the injection of a radioopaque liquid material into the spinal cord area myelography: technique of recording myelograms and the science of interpreting them myeloma: malignant tumor of the bone marrow myocardial infarction: the process of congestion and tissue death (necrosis) in the heart muscle caused by an interruption of the blood supply to the heart myocardium: the muscular tissue of the heart myomectomy: surgical excision of a type of uterine fibroid tumor myopathy: any abnormality or disease of the muscles

myopia: nearsightedness

myopic: nearsighted

myotonia: disorder characterized by increased rigidity or spasms of muscle myotonia, congenita: congenital disease characterized by temporary muscle spasms and muscle rigidity myotonic dystrophy: chronic, progressive disease characterized by weakness and wasting of muscles, cataracts, and heart abnormality myringotomy: surgical incision of the eardrum mysophobia: fear of dirt and contamination naprapathy: the treatment of disease by the manipulative correction of ligaments and connective tissues narcolepsy: disease in which the patient is overcome by drowsiness or an uncontrollable desire for sleep narcosis: stupor or unconsciousness produced by a narcotic drug narcotic: 1. any of various substances, such as morphine, codeine, and opium, that in medicinal doses relieve pain, induce sleep, and in excessive or uncontrolled doses may produce convulsions, coma, and death 2. inducing sleep, in anesthesia nares: the nasal passages or nostrils nasopharyngeal: pertaining to the nasopharynx nasopharynx: the upper part of the pharynx above and behind the soft palate

Natulan: procarbazine natural foods: foods processed minimally, although not necessarily organically grown nausea: feeling of sickness or dizziness usually accompanied by the impulse to vomit navel/umbilicus: the depression at the middle of the abdomen where the umbilical cord of the fetus was attached nearsightedness/myopia: inability to see distant objects clearly neck vertebra: vertebra, cervical necrosis: death of a group of cells, tissue, or a part of the body necrotizing ulcerative gingivitis: see trench mouth needle biopsy: the excising of a tissue sample for biopsy by means of a long needle nematode: any of a class of roundworms, many of which, such as the hookworm or pinworm, are intestinal parasites in man and other animals neonate: newborn baby

neoplasm: any abnormal growth of new tissue, as a tumor, which may be benign or malignant neoplastic: of or characteristic of neoplasms nephrectomy: surgical removal of a kidney nephric: renal

nephritis/Bright's disease: inflammation of the kidneys nephroblastoma: see Wilm's tumor nephrologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the kidney nephrology: branch of medical science dealing with the structure, function, and diseases of the kidney nephron: one of the basic filtration units of the kidney, consisting of Bowman's capsule, a glomerulus, and tubules nephrosis/nephrotic syndrome: disease of the kidneys characterized by degenerative lesions of the renal tubules and loss of protein (albumin) through the urine nerve block/plexus block: form of local anesthesia in which the anesthetic is injected into nerve trunks leading to the area in which surgery is to be performed nerve bundle, master: see spinal cord nerve cell: 1. one of the cells of the nervous system 2. the cell body of a neuron nerve, lingual: nerve beneath the floor of the mouth that conveys taste sensations to the brain motor nerve, olfactory: the special nerve of smell nerve, optic: the special nerve of vision connecting the retina with the occipital lobe of the brain nerve, sensory/afferent: nerve that conveys information and stimuli from the outside world to the central nervous system nerve, spinal: the thirty-one pairs of nerves that originate in the spinal cord nervous breakdown: popular, nontechnical term for any debilitating or incapacitating emotional disorder neural: of or relating to a nerve neuralgia: acute pain along the course of a nerve neuralgia, facial: see trigeminal neuralgia neuralgia, trigeminal/facial/tic douloureux: acutely painful neuralgia of a region of the face, with paroxysmal muscular twitchings, associated with branches of the trigeminal (cranial) nerve in the affected area neuritis: inflammation of a nerve neuroblastoma: malignant tumor of the nerve tissue of the adrenal glands, found especially in children neurofibroma: tumor on a nerve fiber neurogenic shock: shock resulting from impairment of the regulatory capacity of the nervous system because of pain, fright, or other stimulus neurologist: physician specializing in the care and treatment of the nervous system neurology: the branch of medical science that deals with the nervous system neuron: nerve cell with all its processes and extensions, such as the axon and dendrites neuropathologist: physician specializing in neuropathology neuropathology: the branch of medical science that deals with the study, diagnosis, and treatment of diseases of the nervous system neurosis/psychoneurosis (pl., neuroses): mental disorder having no organic cause and less severe than psychosis neurosurgeon: physician specializing in surgery of the nervous system neurosurgery: the branch of medical science that deals with the treatment of disease of the nervous system by means of surgery neurosyphilis: syphilis of the brain and spinal cord neurotic: 1. one who has a neurosis 2. of or relating to neurosis neurotoxic: 1. (of certain poisonous snakes) transmitting venom that directly affects the nervous system and brain of the toxified animal 2. causing destruction or damage to nerve tissue neutrophil/granulocyte/polymorphonuclear leukocyte: granular leukocyte that can be stained with dyes that are neither acid nor alkaline (i.e., neutral) nevus: birthmark or congenital mole junction nicotine: poisonous chemical with acrid taste contained in tobacco leaves night terrors: childhood nightmares which occur in deep sleep and in which the child cries out in terror nit(s): the egg of a louse or other parasitic insect nitrogen dioxide: suffocating gas that is poisonous when inhaled nitroglycerin: colorless or pale yellow oily liquid used to treat angina pectoris nocturia: frequent urination during the night node: 1. swelling or enlargement, as in an arthritic joint, or a firm, flattened tumor on a bone or tendon 2. any knoblike part, as a lymph gland nodule: little node Noludar: methprylon norepinephrine: hormone manufactured by the adrenal medulla that affects heart action and sympathetic nerve impulses

"nose brain": rhinencephalon nostril: one of the outer openings in the nose no-take: absence of any reaction to a vaccination, indicating that the person vaccinated has not developed an immunity and should be revaccinated nutrient: substance that gives nourishment nutriment: substance that nourishes or promotes development nutrition: all of the processes by which food is consumed, digested, absorbed, and assimilated by the body nutritionist: specialist in the study of nutrition nyctophobia: fear of the dark nystagmus: spasmodic, involuntary movement of the eyes, symptomatic of certain diseases, as of the inner ear obesity: excessive accumulation of body fat ob-gyn specialist: physician trained as an obstetrician and gynecologist objective: (of symptoms) of a kind that can be observed or measured by the examining physician through diagnostic techniques obsession: persistent, unwanted idea or feeling, a symptom of certain neuroses obsessive-compulsive reaction: neurosis characterized by obsessions that are relieved temporarily by the compulsive performance of certain acts obstetrician: physician specializing in obstetrics, often a gynecologist as well obstetrics: the branch of medical science dealing with pregnancy and childbirth obstructive-airway disease: condition characterized by the presence of chronic bronchitis and pulmonary emphysema, and involving damage to lung tissue and the bronchi obturator: special device inserted into a cleft palate to close it against the flow of air occipital: of or relating to the lower back part of the skull (occiput) occipital lobe: the rear portion of each cerebral hemisphere which receives messages from the optic nerve occlusion: 1. the act of closing or shutting off so as to block a passage, as a blood vessel 2. the manner of being shut, as the teeth of the upper and lower jaws occupational disease: disease resulting from exposure in one's occupation to toxic substances or other hazards to health ocular: of or relating to the eye oculist: ophthalmologist Oedipal complex: repressed sexual attachment of son to mother, analogous to the Electra complex involving the daughter and father oil glands: glands, sebaceous olfaction: the act, sense, or process of smelling olfactory: pertaining to the sense of smell or the capacity to smell olfactory lobe: the portion of each cerebral hemisphere of the brain on the underside of the frontal lobes, the centers for smelling olfactory nerve: see nerve, olfactory oliguria: decreased production of urine onchocerciasis: form of filariasis transmitted by a blackfly and sometimes leading to blindness oncologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of tumors oncology: the branch of medical science concerned with the study of tumors Oncovin: vincristine oophorectomy: see ovariectomy open bite: form of malocclusion in which incisors of the upper and lower jaws do not meet when the jaws are together open fracture: compound fracture open surgery: surgery involving an incision and opening of the skin ophthalmic: of or pertaining to the eye ophthalmologist/oculist: physician specializing in the care and treatment of the eyes ophthalmology: the branch of medical science dealing with the structure, function, and diseases of the eye ophthalmoscope: optical instrument for examining the interior of the eye opiate: drug derived from opium, as morphine opium: narcotic drug obtained from the opium poppy from which morphine, codeine, heroin, and other drugs are derived optic/optical: pertaining to the eye or to vision optician: one who makes or sells eyeglasses and other optical equipment optic nerve: special nerve of vision, conveying sensations from the retina to the brain optometrist: one who practices optometry optometry: profession of measuring the power of vision and prescribing corrective lenses oral: pertaining to or situated near the mouth oral cancer: see mouth oral surgeon/dental surgeon: dentist who specializes in oral surgery oral surgery: the diagnosis and surgical treatment of diseases, injuries, and defects of the mouth and jaw orbit: either of the bony sockets of the eyes orchidopexy/orchiopexy: surgical correction of an undescended testicle orchiectomy: surgical removal of one or both testicles orchiopexy: see orchidopexy orchitis: inflammation of the testicles organic: 1. of or pertaining to an organ of the body 2. having a physical basis, as a disorder 3. of or pertaining to animals or plants 4. pertaining to foods grown only with natural fertilizers of animal or plant origin organic foods: foods grown with the use of organic fertilizers only, such as compost or animal (not human) manure, and without the use of pesticides or herbicides organ of Corti: the true center of hearing within the cochlea of the inner ear, a complex spiral structure of hair cells orgasm: the climax of the sexual act, normally marked by the male's ejaculation of semen and by relaxation of tension of both male and female orifice: opening into a body cavity orthodontia: orthodontics orthodontics/orthodontia: the care and treatment of irregularities and faulty positions of the teeth, including the fitting of braces orthodontist: dentist specializing in orthodontics orthopedics: the branch of surgery dealing with the treatment and correction of deformities, injuries, and diseases of the skeletal system and its associated structures, as muscles and joints orthopedic surgeon: orthopedist orthopedist/orthopedic surgeon/orthopod: surgeon specializing in orthopedics orthopod: orthopedist orthoptist: medical technician trained to diagnose defects of the eye muscles and to provide corrective exercises oscilloscope: instrument for visibly representing electrical activity on a fluorescent screen osseous: osteal

ossicle: one of the three small connecting bones of the middle ear, the hammer (or malleus), the anvil (or incus), and the stirrup (or stapes), that transmit sound from the eardrum to the cochlea ossification: conversion into bone ossify: to convert or be converted into bone osteal/osseous: of or relating to bone osteitis: inflammation of a bone osteitis deformans: see Paget's disease osteoarthritis/degenerative joint disease/hypertrophic arthritis: chronic degenerative disease that affects the joints osteogenesis: formation and growth of bones osteogenesis, imperfecta: condition in which bones are abnormally brittle and liable to fracture because of a deficiency of calcium osteogenic: pertaining to osteogenesis osteomyelitis: inflammation of the bone tissue or marrow osteopath: physician trained in osteopathy osteopathy: system of healing based on a theory that most diseases are caused by structural abnormalities that may best be corrected by manipulation osteophyte(s): abnormal bony outgrowth osteoporosis: reduction in bone mass and increase in interior space, porosity, and fragility of bone otitis media: inflammation of the middle ear otitis media, nonsuppurative: inflammation of the middle ear resulting from a blocked Eustachian tube and fluid collection in the middle ear, causing hearing damage otolaryngologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of the ear, nose, and throat otolaryngology: the branch of medicine dealing with the study and diseases of the ear, nose, and throat otologist: one who specializes in the ear and its diseases otology: the branch of medical science dealing with the functions and diseases of the ear otoplasty: surgical technique to correct protruding or overlarge ears or to build up or replace a missing ear otosclerosis: ear disorder resulting in hearing loss caused by the formation of spongy bone in the middle ear otoscope: instrument used for examining the interior of the ear outer ear: the external, fleshy part of the ear, including the auditory canal leading to the eardrum (tympanic membrane) outpatient: patient who is not an inmate of a hospital or clinic at which treatment or diagnosis is received ova: plural of ovum
ovarian: of or relating to the ovaries ovarian dysgenesis: defective development of ovaries ovariectomy/oophorectomy: surgical removal of an ovary ovaries (sing., ovary): pair of female reproductive glands (gonads) that produce eggs (ova) and female sex hormones overbite: extent to which upper teeth extend over lower teeth when the jaws are in closed position overweight: see obesity ovoid: egg-shaped ovulation: the discharge of a mature egg cell (ovum) from the ovaries, occurring about once every 28 days at about the middle of the menstrual cycle ovum/egg cell (pl. ova): female reproductive cell or gamete from which an embryo might develop if fertilized oxytocin: hormone secreted by the pituitary gland to help the muscles of the uterus contract during labor ozone: blue gas with a pungent odor that can be formed by the passage of electricity through the air pacemaker, artificial: electrically activited, battery- or nuclear-powered device used to stimulate normal heartbeat if the natural cardiac pacemaker fails to function pacemaker, cardiac: object or substance in the heart that regulates contraction of the heart muscle, or heartbeat Paget's disease: 1. (osteitis deformans) chronic disease characterized by the softening and enlargement of the bones and usually the bowing of the long, weight-bearing bones 2. cancerous disease of the breast marked by the inflammation of the areola and nipple palate: the roof of the mouth palate, hard: the bony part of the roof of the mouth palate, soft/velum: the soft, muscular tissue at the rear of the roof of the mouth palpation: diagnostic procedure of feeling, pressing, or manipulating the body palpitation: rapid or fluttering heartbeat palsy/paralysis: Bell's palsy, cerebral palsy PAN: peroxyacl nitrate pancreas: large gland situated behind the stomach and containing the islets of Langerhans that produce insulin and glucagon, and secreting pancreatic juice via small ducts to the duodenum pancreatic juice: secretion of the pancreas containing digestive enzymes pancreatitis: inflammation of the pancreas pandemic: epidemic occurring over a very large area or worldwide Papanicolaou, Dr. George N.: developer of a test, called the Pap smear or Pap test, for detecting cancer of the cervix Papanicolaou smear: Pap smear papillae (sing., papilla): tiny, nipple-shaped projections that cover the inner layer (dermis) of the skin and the surface of the tongue papillary tumor: 1. papilloma: benign tumor of the papillae of the skin, as a wart or corn 2. malignant tumor of the bladder, so called because it is nipplelike in shape (Latin papilla means nipple)

Pap smear/Papanicolaou smear/Pap test: method of early detection of cervical cancer consisting of painless removal of cervical cell samples, which are stained and examined Pap test: Pap smear papule: pimple paralysis agitans: Parkinson's disease paralysis, infantile: see poliomyelitis paranasal sinus: air cavity in one of the cranial bones communicating with the nostrils paranoid: describing a personality disorder in which the individual is extraordinarily sensitive to praise or criticism and subject to suspicions and feelings of persecution paranoid reaction/paranoia: psychosis characterized by invariable delusion, usually of persecution, sometimes of grandeur paranoid schizophrenia: see schizophrenia, paranoid paraplegia: paralysis of the lower half of the body paraplegic: one who is paralyzed in the lower half of the body, including both legs parasite(s): animal or plant that lives in or on another organism (called the host), at whose expense it obtains nourishment parasiticide: medication designed to destroy parasites such as body lice parasympathetic nervous system: the part of the autonomic nervous system that controls such involuntary actions as the constriction of pupils, dilation of blood vessels and salivary glands, and slowing of heartbeat parathormone/parathyroid hormone: hormone secreted by the parathyroid glands, important in regulating the amount of calcium in the body parathyroid glands: four small endocrine glands near or embedded within the thyroid gland, usually two per side, that regulate blood calcium and phosphorus levels parathyroid hormone: see parathormone paresis: 1. partial paralysis 2. general paralysis (general paresis) caused by degeneration of the brain as a result of syphilis parkinsonism: Parkinson's disease Parkinson's disease/paralysis agitans/parkinsonism: chronic, progressive nervous disease characterized by muscle tremor when at rest, stiffness, and a rigid facial expression parotid gland: either of two large salivary glands located below and in front of the ear paroxysm: sudden onset of acute symptoms, as an attack or convulsions parrot fever: psittacosis particulate matter: fine particles in smoke that are dispersed by the wind and fall back to earth parturition: act or process of giving birth passive-dependent: describing a personality disorder in which the individual needs excessive emotional support from an authority figure patch test: skin test for determining hypersensitivity by applying small pads of possibly allergy-producing substances to the skin's surface patchy baldness: alopecia areata patella: the kneecap pathogen: disease-causing bacterium or microorganism pathogenic: disease-causing pathologic: caused by or relating to disease pathologic fracture: fracture that occurs spontaneously, as because of preexisting disease, without external cause pathologist: physician or expert specializing in pathology pathology: the branch of medical science dealing with the causes, nature, and effects of diseases, especially disease-induced changes in organs, tissues, and body chemistry PCBs/polychlorinated biphenyls: chemicals related to DDT and having many industrial uses, posing a potential threat to health as a water pollutant from industrial wastes pectus carinatum: see pigeon breast pectus excavatum: see funnel chest pedal: of or relating to the foot pediatric dentist: dentist specializing in the care and treatment of the teeth of children pediatrician: physician specializing in the care and treatment of children pediatrics: the branch of medicine dealing with the care and treatment of children and their diseases pedodontics: branch of dentistry specializing in the care of children pedodontist: dentist specializing in pedodontics pellagra: disease caused by a vitamin deficiency and characterized by gastric disturbance, skin eruptions, and nervous symptoms pelvic girdle: the part of the human skeleton to which the lower limbs are attached pelvis: 1. the part of the skeleton that forms a bony girdle or basin joining the lower limbs to the body, and consisting of the two hip bones and the sacrum 2. the central area of the kidney from which urine drains into the ureter penicillin: powerful antibacterial substance found in a mold fungus and prepared in several forms for the treatment of a wide variety of infections penis: tubular male organ of sexual intercourse and excretion of urine, located at the front of the pelvis Pentothal/sodium Pentothal/thiopental: trademark for an ultra-short-acting barbiturate used as an anesthetic, as in dentistry pep pills: see amphetamines pepsin: enzyme secreted by the gastric juices of the stomach peptic ulcer: ulcer of the mucous membrane of the stomach (gastric ulcer) or small intestine (duodenal ulcer) caused by the action of acid juices percussion: diagnostic procedure of striking or tapping the body with instruments or with the fingers perianal: situated around the anus pericarditis: inflammation of the pericardium pericardium: the membrane that surrounds and protects the heart peridental: periodontal perimeter: device for determining peripheral vision perineal: of or pertaining to the perineum perineum: region of the body at the lower end of the trunk, between the genital organs and the anus periodontal/peridental: situated around a tooth periodontal membrane: membrane, periodontal periodontia: periodontics periodontics/periodontia: the branch of dentistry dealing with the diagnosis and treatment of periodontal (gum) diseases periodontist: dentist who specializes in periodontics periodontitis: inflammation of the tissues around a tooth, leading to destruction of the alveolar bone periodontium: the supporting structures of the teeth, comprised of the gingiva, alveolar bone, and periodontal ligaments periosteum: the tough, fibrous membrane that surrounds and nourishes bones peripheral nervous system: the nerves and ganglia outside the brain and spinal cord peristalsis: wavelike muscular contractions of the alimentary canal that move the contents along in the processes of digestion and excretion peristaltic wave: the alternate contraction and relaxation of muscles in the alimentary canal in peristalsis peritoneoscopy: technique for examining the female reproductive organs within the abdominal cavity peritoneoscope/laparoscope: instrument used for examining the organs within the abdominal cavity, especially the female reproductive organs peritoneum: the serous membrane that lines the abdominal cavity enclosing the abdominal organs peritonitis: inflammation of the lining (peritoneum) of the abdominal cavity peritonsillar abscess/quinsy: abscess in the tissues adjoining a tonsil as a complication of tonsillitis pernicious: severe, destructive, and often fatal pernicious anemia: severe, progressive anemia caused by lack of vitamin B_{12}, formerly fatal but now controllable personality disorder/character disorder: any of a group of mental illnesses that apparently stem from an arrested development of the personality perspiration: see sweat pertussis: see whooping cough pessary: 1. device worn inside the vagina as a contraceptive or to support uterine prolapse 2. medicated suppository for use in the vagina petit mal: minor epileptic seizure, with very brief loss of consciousness Peyer's patches: oval areas of lymphoid tissue in the intestine that manufacture lymphocytes peyote: the mescal cactus of Mexico or the powerful hallucinogenic drug obtained from its dried upper part (called buttons) phalanges (sing., phalanx): the bones of the fingers or toes pharmacist: one skilled in the compounding and dispensing of medicines pharmacologist: expert in pharmacology pharmacology: the science of the action of medicines, their nature, preparation, administration, and effects pharyngitis: inflammation of the pharynx, commonly called a sore throat pharynx: the part of the alimentary canal between the palate and the esophagus, serving as a passage for air and food phenformin: see DBI phenol: see carbolic acid phenylketonuria/PKU: inherited metabolic disorder that can cause mental retardation if not treated by a special diet soon after birth phlebitis: inflammation of the inner membrane of a vein phlebotomy/bloodletting/venesection: the opening of a vein for letting blood phlegm: viscid, stringy mucus secreted in abnormally large amounts, as in the air passages phobia: intense anxiety irrationally felt for any of a variety of things or situations, such as closed or open places, animals of a particular kind, heights, etc., a manifestation of the phobic reaction phobic reaction: neurosis characterized by displacement of anxiety of a conflict to a substitute, such as a particular domestic animal, closed places, etc.

phonocardiogram: graph recording the sounds produced by the heart, used to evaluate heart murmurs and other abnormal sounds physical dependence: accommodation of the body to continued use of a drug, such that withdrawing the drug causes pronounced physical reactions (withdrawal symptoms) physical fitness: see fitness physical medicine: branch of medicine utilizing physical procedures, such as heat, cold, massage, or mechanical devices, to diagnose disease or treat disabled patients physical therapist: specialist in physical therapy physical therapy/physiotherapy: the treatment of disability, injury, or disease by external physical means, such as heat, massage, planned exercises, electricity, or mechanical devices, to restore function or aid rehabilitation physician(s): 1. any authorized practitioner of medicine 2. one trained in medicine, as distinguished from surgery physiotherapy: see physical therapy pia mater: the delicate, vascular, innermost membrane of the three membranes that envelop the brain and spinal cord pica: appetite for substances unfit to eat piebald skin: vitiligo pigeon breast/pectus carinatum: congenital deformity in which the sternum protrudes pigment: substance that imparts coloring to tissue piles: see hemorrhoids "pill, the": contraceptives, oral pimple/papule: small, usually inflamed swelling on the skin pineal body: see pineal gland pineal gland/pineal body: small, cone-shaped body of rudimentary glandular structure located at the base of the brain and having no known function pinkeye: acute, contagious conjunctivitis, marked by redness of the eyeball pinworm: parasitic worm of the lower intestines and rectum, especially of children, causing intense itching in the anal area pituitary body: see pituitary gland pituitary gland/hypophysis cerebri/pituitary body: small endocrine gland situated at the base of the brain, consisting of anterior and posterior lobes whose hormonal secretions stimulate the production of hormones in other glands and regulate vital body functions such as growth and metabolism pityriasis rosea: skin disease, especially of children, marked by a rash PKU: see phenylketonuria placebo: any harmless substance given to humor a patient or as a test in controlled experiments on the effects of drugs placenta: the vascular structure in pregnant women that unites the fetus with the uterus, and through which the fetus is nourished via the umbilical cord, usually expelled naturally immediately following birth (when it is called the afterbirth) Placidyl: ethchlorvynol plague: 1. any epidemic disease that is contagious and often deadly 2. contagious, often fatal disease caused by a bacterium transmitted by fleas from infected rats, and characterized by fever, chills, prostration, and often by buboes (hence the name bubonic plague) plantar warts: warts on the soles of the feet, caused by a virus plaque: mucus containing bacteria that collects on teeth plasma: the clear fluid portion of the blood plastic surgeon: physician specializing in plastic or cosmetic surgery plastic surgery: surgery that deals with the restoration or healing of lost, injured, or deformed parts of the body, mainly by the transfer of tissue, and with the improvement of appearance (cosmetic surgery) platelet/thrombocyte: small, disk-shaped body found in blood that aids in clotting play therapy: psychotherapy, especially for patients who are children, in which toys or other playthings are made available for the patient to play with in the presence of the therapist playthings: see toys pleura: serous membrane that enfolds the lungs and lines the chest cavity pleural cavity: the space between the two pleuras lining the lungs and chest cavity pleurisy: inflammation of the pleura, characterized by fever, chest pain, and difficulty in breathing plexus: interlacement of cordlike body structures, such as blood vessels or nerves
pneumococcus: bacterium that can cause pneumonia pneumoconiosis: any of various lung disorders, such as silicosis or black lung disease, resulting from the inhalation of dust or other minute particles pneumoencephalogram: X-ray picture of the brain taken after air or gas has been injected to partially replace the cerebrospinal fluid pneumoencephalography: technique of producing pneumoencephalograms and interpreting them pneumonia: inflammation of the lungs, usually bacterial in origin and acute in course, characterized by high fever, chills, breathing difficulty, and cough pneumothorax: accumulation of air or gas in the pleural cavity, causing the lung to collapse, as from injury or disease, or by injection (artificial pneumothorax) in the treatment of tuberculosis podiatrist/chiropodist: one who specializes in the treatment of the foot podiatry/chiropody: the study and treatment of disorders of the feet polio: see poliomyelitis poliomyelitis/infantile paralysis/Heine-Medin disease: acute viral disease of the central nervous system characterized by fever, headache, sore throat, stiffness of the neck and back, and sometimes by paralysis and eventual atrophy of muscles pollutant: something that pollutes the air, water, or soil polycystic: characterized by numerous cysts polycythemia: condition characterized by too many red blood corpuscles polycythemia vera/erythremia: condition characterized by abnormally high number and proportion of red blood corpuscles polymenorrhea: abnormally frequent menstruation polymorphonuclear leukocyte: see neutrophil polymyositis: inflammation of a number of muscles and connective tissue, characterized by pain, swelling, and weakness polyp: smooth growth or tumor found in the mucous membranes, as of the nose, bladder, uterus, or rectum polyunsaturated: (of fats) tending to lower the cholesterol content of the blood polyuria: excessive urination pons: mass in the brain containing fibers that connect the medulla oblongata, the cerebellum, and the cerebrum pontic: in dentistry, a part of a bridge serving as a substitute for a missing tooth popliteal: pertaining to the back part of the leg behind the knee portal vein: vein that conveys blood from the intestines and stomach to the liver
"port wine stain": hemangioma positive pressure breathing: breathing of air or other gas mixture at pressure greater than the surrounding atmospheric pressure posterior: toward the rear posterior lobe hypophysis: the posterior part of the pituitary gland that produces hormones regulating kidney function and other vital processes posterior urethra: prostatic urethra postmenopausal: being or occurring after menopause postpartum: after childbirth postural drainage: the loosening and draining of lung secretions by assuming a prone position with the head lower than the feet

pot (slang): marihuana
Pott's disease: tuberculosis or tissue destruction of the spinal vertebrae, causing angular, spinal curvature PPD: purified protein derivative prediabetic condition: diabetes, chemical pre-eclampsia: disorder of late pregnancy or following childbirth preemie/premie: premature infant pregnancy: condition or time of being pregnant pregnant: carrying developing offspring in the uterus preinvasive: before spreading to other tissues: said of malignant growths Preludin: phenmetrazine premature: of a newborn baby, weighing less than 5 pounds premature ejaculation: ejaculation of semen during sexual intercourse before the female has had time to respond premenopausal: being or occurring before menopause premolar: see bicuspid prenatal: before birth prenatal diagnosis: amniocentesis preop: see preoperative preoperative/preop: performed or occurring before a surgical operation, as shaving of the affected area, administration of certain drugs, etc.
prep: preparation of a patient for surgery, usually including cleansing and shaving of the affected area prepuce: the loose skin covering the head of the penis or the clitoris presbyopia: farsightedness caused by aging of the lens or the muscles that expand and contract it pressor: tending to raise blood pressure, as certain hormones preventive medicine: the branch of medical science concerned with preventing disease, as through immunological methods prickly heat/heat rash/miliaria: itchy rash of small red pimples caused by excessive sweating in hot weather primary: 1. not produced as a secondary effect or complication of another condition 2. original and not resulting from metastasis or other means of transmission, as a tumor or infection primary teeth: see baby teeth primipara: woman who is pregnant for the first time or who has borne one child process: in anatomy, any outgrowth or projecting part of a larger structure, as the knobby portion of a vertebra proctologist: physician specializing in proctology proctology: the branch of medicine that deals with the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the lower colon, rectum, and anus proctoscope: surgical instrument for examining the interior of the rectum and part of the colon proctoscopy: examination of the rectum and colon with the aid of a proctoscope proctosigmoidoscopy: examination of the rectum and a portion of the colon (sigmoid) with the aid of a sigmoidoscope prodrome: symptom resembling a premonition that signals the onset of a disease or of an epileptic seizure profibrinolysin: the inactive precursor of fibrinolysin, an agent in the process of dissolving blood clots progesterone: hormone of the ovary that prepares the uterus for receiving the fertilized ovum prognathism: the condition of having a protruding jaw, especially the lower prognosis: prediction made by a doctor as to the probable course of a disease prolactin: lactogenic hormone prolapse: move or slip forward or downward, as a displaced organ prolapsed: slipped or moved from the usual place pronate: turn, as the hand or foot, in a movement of pronation pronation: 1. rotation of the hand or forearm so that the palm of the hand faces downward or backward 2. movement of the foot, as in improper walking, in which the sole is raised along the outer side and the toes turned out, often with an inward leaning of the ankle prone: lying on the chest, with the face downward proof: strength of alcohol in an alcoholic beverage, indicated by a proof number equal to twice the percentage of alcohol by volume (100 proof = 50% alcohol) prophylactic: tending to ward off or prevent, as disease or conception prophylaxis: treatment intended to prevent disease, as the cleaning of teeth propranolol: drug that causes blood vessels to dilate, used in the treatment of angina pectoris prostate: partly muscular gland in males at the base of the bladder around the urethra that releases a fluid to convey spermatozoa prostate, enlarged benign: enlargement of the prostate gland resulting in difficulty in voiding and retention of urine in the bladder prostate, inflammation of: prostatitis prostatectomy: surgical removal of all or part of the prostate gland prostatic urethra/posterior urethra: the part of the male urethra that passes across the prostate gland prostatitis: inflammation of the prostate gland, characterized by painful and excessive urination prostatitis, acute: severe, relatively uncommon form of prostatitis, marked by painful and excessive urination, high fever, and a discharge of pus from the penis prosthesis (pl., prostheses)/prosthetic device: artificial substitute for a missing or amputated part, as an arm or leg prosthetic device: prosthesis protein(s): any of a class of highly complex organic compounds, composed principally of amino acids, that occur in all living things and form an essential part of animal food requirements proteinuria: excretion of protein through the urine prothrombin: the inactive precursor of thrombin, an agent in the process of forming blood clots protozoa (sing., protozoon): microscopic animal organisms that exist in countless numbers, including one-celled organisms and parasitic forms that cause malaria, sleeping sickness, and other diseases proud flesh: see granulation tissue proximal: relatively near the center of the body or near a point considered as central proximal muscles: those muscles closest to the trunk of the body, such as the shoulder-arm and hip-thigh muscles pruritus: localized or general itching pruritus, anal: intense itching in the area of the anus pseudohypertrophic muscular dystrophy/Duchenne's muscular dystrophy: disease characterized by the enlargement and apparent overdevelopment (hypertrophy) of certain muscles, especially of the shoulder girdle, which subsequently atrophy pseudoneoplasm: see pseudotumor pseudotumor/pseudoneoplasm: condition that has the appearance of a tumor but is not a tumor, such as an inflammation psilocybin: derivative of the mushroom Psilocybe mexicana, which produces hallucinations in the user psittacosis/parrot fever: infectious disease of parrots and other birds that can be transmitted to humans and cause symptoms like those of influenza psoralen: chemical derived from a plant that is used in the treatment of psoriasis psoriasis: a noncontagious chronic condition of the skin, marked by bright red patches covered by silvery scales psychiatrist: physician specializing in psychiatry psychiatry: the branch of medicine that treats disorders of the mind (or psyche), including psychoses and neuroses psychoanalysis: system of psychotherapy originated by Sigmund Freud for treating emotional disorders by bringing to the attention of the conscious mind the repressed conflicts of the unconscious psychoanalyst: one who practices psychoanalysis psychodrama: psychotherapy in which a patient or group of patients act out situations centered about their personal conflicts in the presence of the therapist psychogenic: caused by or contributed to by psychological factors psychological dependence: emotional desire or need to continue using a drug psychologist: specialist in psychology psychology: the science dealing with the mind, mental phenomena, consciousness, and behavior psychomimetic: having properties capable of producing changes in behavior that mimic psychoses psychomotor: having to do with muscular movements resulting from mental processes psychomotor convulsion/temporal lobe convulsion: epileptic convulsion characterized by compulsive and often repetitious behavior of which the patient later has no memory psychoneurosis: neurosis psychopathic: see sociopathic psychophysiological/psychosomatic: pertaining to a class of disorders in which psychological factors contribute substantially to the physiological condition psychosis (pl., psychoses): severe mental disorder often involving disorganization of the total personality, with or without organic disease psychosomatic: pertaining to the effects of the emotions on body processes, especially with respect to initiating or aggravating disease psychotherapist: specialist in psychotherapy psychotherapy: the treatment of emotional and mental disorders by psychological methods, such as psychoanalysis psychotic: one suffering from a psychosis psychotropic: affecting the mind: said of certain drugs ptomaine: substance derived from decomposing or putrefying animal or vegetable protein, rarely the cause of food poisoning, which is usually caused by bacteria such as Salmonella ptosis: dropping of the upper eyelid ptyalin: enzyme in saliva that begins the chemical breakdown of starch puberty: period during which a person reaches sexual maturity and becomes functionally capable of reproduction puberty, precocious: early menarche (first occurrence of menstruation), before the age of eight or nine pubic: in the region of the lower abdomen pubis: the lower anterior part of the hip bone pulmonary: of or relating to the lungs pulmonary artery: artery, pulmonary pulmonary emphysema: emphysema of the lungs; see emphysema pulmonary tuberculosis: see tuberculosis pulmonary vein: see vein, pulmonary pulp: (of teeth) the soft tissue of blood vessels and nerves that fills the central cavity of a tooth pulpotomy: surgical removal of the pulp of a tooth pulse: rhythmic pressure in the arteries resulting from the beating of the heart puncture wound: wound caused by an object that pierces the skin, as a nail or tack, involving increased danger of tetanus pupil: contractile opening in the iris of the eye through which light reaches the retina purine: one of a group of chemicals occurring naturally in certain foods and formerly implicated as a contributing cause of gout purpura: blood disease characterized by hemorrhaging into the skin and mucous membranes purulent: consisting of or secreting pus pus: secretion from inflamed and healing tissues, usually viscid or creamy, and containing decaying leukocytes, bacteria, and other tissue debris pustule: pus-filled bump on the skin, inflamed at the base pyelitis: pyelonephritis pyelogram: visualization of the kidney and ureter by X ray pyelonephritis/pyelitis: infection and inflammation of the kidneys pyloric sphincter: the ring of muscle surrounding the pylorus that acts as a valve, allowing food to pass from the stomach to the duodenum pyloric stenosis: congenital condition in which the pylorus is too narrow to allow the stomach's contents to empty normally pylorus: the opening between the stomach and the duodenum pyorrhea: discharge of pus, especially when applied to the progressive inflammation of the gingival (gum) tissue, which may lead to loosening and loss of teeth pyrexia: see fever pyrogenic: causing or inducing fever

Q fever: infectious disease (rickettsial disease) transmitted by sheep and cattle and characterized by high fever, chills, and muscle pains quadriplegia: paralysis of both arms and both legs quadriplegic: one suffering from paralysis of both arms and both legs quinine: bitter substance obtained from the bark of the cinchona tree, used to treat malaria and myotonia quinsy: see peritonsillar abscess rabies/hydrophobia: acute viral disease of the central nervous system transmitted to humans by the bite or saliva of an infected animal, as a dog, bat, or squirrel, invariably fatal unless treated before symptoms appear radiation sickness: illness caused by the body's absorption of excess radiation, marked by fatigue, nausea, vomiting, and sometimes internal hemorrhage and tissue breakdown radiation therapy/radiotherapy: treatment of disease by radiation, as by X rays or other radioactive substances radical: of or involving procedures or treatment intended to go to the root of a disease and thereby eliminate it, as by excising an entire organ or part that is diseased radiograph: X-ray photograph radiography: X-ray photography radiologist: physician specializing in radiology radiology: the branch of medical science that deals with radiant energy, such as X rays and energy produced by radium, cobalt, and other radioactive substances, especially in the diagnosis and treatment of disease radiopaque: impervious to X rays radiotherapy: see radiation therapy radius (pl., radii): the bone of the forearm on the same side as the thumb, thicker and shorter than the ulna bone rale: abnormal sound heard in the chest with the aid of a stethoscope, indicating the presence of disease

Raynaud's disease: Raynaud's syndrome
Raynaud's syndrome/Raynaud's disease: condition characterized by spasms of small blood vessels when exposed to cold, especially the fingers and toes, which become cyanotic (bluish) and then red RBC: red blood cell recovery room: hospital room or section for patients immediately following surgery, where their post-operative conditions can be closely monitored rectocele: hernia in which part of the rectum protrudes through the wall of the vagina rectum: the terminal portion of the large intestine, extending from the sigmoid bend of the colon to the anus red corpuscle: see erythroctye red marrow: marrow reduce: move back into proper position, as a herniating bowel or the fragments of a broken bone reducing: see weight reduction reduction: manipulation back into proper position to restore normal function, as a fracture, dislocation, or herniated part referred pain: pain felt in one part of the body though originating in another part, as pain of the left shoulder and arm caused by a heart attack reflex: involuntary response to a stimulus reflux: a flowing back, as of urine from the bladder up into the ureter refraction: the change of direction of a ray of light as it passes from one medium to another of different density regional enteritis: enteritis in a chronic state regurgitation: the act of rushing or surging back, as in vomiting, or the backward rush of blood in the heart because of defective valves or leaflets Reiter's syndrome: form of arthritis characterized by occurrence of conjunctivitis of the eye and inflammation of the urethra relaxant: drug or other agent that reduces tension, especially of the muscles remission: period with less severe symptoms or without symptoms during the course of a disease renal/nephric: of or relating to the kidneys renal calculus: kidney stone renal colic: pain that results from the passage of a kidney stone through the ureter renal diabetes: renal glucosuria renal glucosuria/renal diabetes: glucose in the urine in conjunction with normal blood sugar levels, due to failure of the renal tubules to reabsorb glucose rennin: milk-curdling enzyme present in gastric juice repression: exclusion from consciousness of painful desires, memories, etc., and consequent manifestation through the unconscious resect: perform a resection on resection: surgical removal of a part of a bone, organ, etc.

resectoscope: surgical instrument used especially for resection of the prostate gland by insertion into the urethra residency: period of training in a hospital, usually in a medical specialty, for physicians preparing for private practice resident: physician working and undergoing training (residency) in a hospital in preparation for private practice in a specialty resorb: to reabsorb respiration: the process by which an animal or plant takes in oxygen from the air and gives off carbon dioxide and other products of oxidation respiratory arrest: see breathing, cessation of respiratory distress syndrome: see hyaline membrane disease resuscitation: mouth-to-mouth respiration retardation, mental: see mental retardation retention cyst: see cyst, follicular reticulum: network of cells or cellular tissue retina: the inner membrane at the back of the eyeball, containing light-sensitive rods and cones which receive the optical image retinoblastoma: tumor of the eye, found especially in children retinopathy: diseased condition of the retina of the eye retinopathy, diabetic: see diabetic retinopathy retinoscope: special device for examining the retina rhesus factor: Rh factor rheumatic fever: acute infectious disease chiefly affecting children and young adults, characterized by painful inflammation around the joints, intermittent fever, and inflammation of the pericardium and valves of the heart rheumatic heart disease: impairment of heart function as a result of rheumatic fever rheumatism: painful inflammation and stiffness of muscles, joints, or connective tissue rheumatoid arthritis: chronic disease characterized by swelling and inflammation of one or more joints, often resulting in stiffness and eventual impairment of mobility rheumatoid arthritis, juvenile/Still's disease: form of rheumatoid arthritis affecting children, often characterized by fever, rash, pleurisy, and enlargement of the spleen as well as rheumatoid joint symptoms rheumatoid spondylitis: see spondylitis, rheumatoid rheumatologist: physician specializing in rheumatology rheumatology: subspecialty of internal medicine concerned with the study, diagnosis, and treatment of rheumatism and other diseases of the joints and muscles Rh factor/rhesus factor: protein present in the blood of most people (called Rh-positive) and absent from others (called Rh-negative). Under certain conditions the blood of a pregnant Rh-negative woman may be incompatible with the blood of her fetus rhinecephalon/"nose brain": the part of the brain controlling the sense of smell rhinitis: inflammation of the mucous membranes of the nose rhinoplasty: plastic surgery of the nose
Rh negative: see Rh factor Rh positive: see Rh factor rhythm method: birth control method whereby sexual intercourse is avoided during the period of ovulation in the menstrual cycle rhytidoplasty/face lift/facial plasty: plastic surgery to eliminate facial wrinkles rib(s): one of the series of curved bones attached to the spine and enclosing the chest cavity rib cage/thoracic cage: the part of the skeleton that encloses the chest, bound by the ribs and the spinal vertebrae riboflavin/vitamin B_2: member of the vitamin B complex, found in milk, green leafy vegetables, eggs and meats rickets: early childhood disease characterized by softening of bones and consequent deformity, caused by deficiency of vitamin D rickettsiae (sing., rickettsia): parasitic microorganisms transmitted to humans by the bites of infected ticks, lice, and fleas, and causing Rocky Mountain spotted fever, Q fever, rickettsial pox, and typhus rickettsial: caused by or pertaining to rickettsiae rickettsial disease: any of the diseases, as typhus or Rocky Mountain spotted fever, caused by rickettsiae rickettsial pox: infectious disease, rickettsial disease, transmitted by mites which infest mice, and characterized by fever, chills, rash, headache, and backache ringworm/tinea: contagious fungus disease of the skin, hair, or nails marked by ring-shaped, scaly, reddish patches of skin
Ritalin: methylphenidate
Rocky Mountain spotted fever: infectious disease (rickettsial disease) transmitted by the bite of certain ticks and characterized by fever, chills, rash, headache, and muscular pain rod: one of many rod-shaped bodies in the retina of the eye, sensitive to faint light and peripheral objects and movements roentgenogram: X-ray photograph roentgenologist: physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases with the application of X rays roentgenology: the branch of medical science dealing with the properties and effects of X rays root canal: the passageway of nerves and blood vessels in the root of a tooth leading into the pulp roseola infantum: childhood illness characterized by high fever followed by a body rash roughage: food material containing a high percentage of indigestible constituents roundworm/ascaris: parasitic nematode worm, as the hookworm and pinworm, whose eggs hatch in the small intestines rubella/German measles: contagious viral disease benign in children but linked to birth defects of children born of women infected in early pregnancy rubeola: measles Rubin's test: tubal insufflation rupture: 1. any breaking apart, as of a blood vessel 2. hernia

Sabin vaccine: live polio vaccine taken orally to immunize against polio sacral: pertaining to the sacrum sacroiliac: pertaining to the sacrum or the ilium, or to the places on either side of the lower back where they are joined sacrum: bone in the lower spine formed by the fusing of five vertebrae, constituting the rear part of the pelvis saddle block: form of anesthesia used especially for childbirth, in which the patient is injected in the lower spinal cord while in a sitting position safety glass: glass strengthened by any of various methods to reduce the likelihood of the glass shattering upon impact St. Vitus dance: chorea saline amniocentesis/salting out: technique of inducing abortion by injecting a saline solution into the amniotic fluid saliva: fluid secreted by the salivary glands in the mouth that lubricates food and contains an enzyme (ptyalin) that begins to break down starch salivary glands: glands located in the mouth which secrete saliva
Salk vaccine: dead polio virus taken by injection to immunize against polio Salmonella: genus of aerobic bacteria that cause food poisoning and other diseases, including typhoid fever Salmonella typhosa: rod-shaped bacteria that cause typhoid fever

salpingitis: 1. inflammation of a Fallopian tube, a potential cause of sterility 2. inflammation of a Eustachian tube salt: sodium chloride salting out: the injection of a saline solution into the amniotic fluid to induce labor and thus terminate a pregnancy salt, table: see sodium chloride saphenous vein: either of two large, superficial veins of the leg, a common site of varicosity sarcoid: see sarcoidosis sarcoidosis/Boeck's sarcoid/sarcoid: disease of unknown cause with symptoms resembling those of tuberculosis, marked by the formation of nodules, especially on the skin, lungs, and lymph nodes sarcoma: malignant tumor that arises in the connective tissue (bones, cartilage, tendons) saturated: (of fats) tending to increase the cholesterol content of the blood saucerization: procedure of forming a shallow depression by scraping away tissue to assist healing scabies/the itch: contagious inflammation of the skin caused by a mite and characterized by a rash and intense itching scag (slang): heroin scan: to measure for diagnostic purposes the concentration in a particular area of a radioactive material that has been introduced into the body scapula: shoulder blade scarlet fever: contagious disease caused by streptococci and characterized by a scarlet rash and high fever schistosomiasis/bilharziasis: tropical disease caused by a fluke worm (trematode) whose larvae penetrate the skin and invade the circulatory system schizoid: 1. describing a personality disorder in which the individual is withdrawn from and indifferent to other people 2. pertaining to or resembling schizophrenia schizophrenia, catatonic: schizophrenia marked by motor disturbances, such as maintenance of fixed, often awkward, position with muscles rigid schizophrenia, hebephrenic: schizophrenia marked by delusions, hallucinations, and regressed or childish behavior schizophrenia, paranoid: schizophrenia marked by variable delusions of persecution or grandeur, often with hallucinations and behavioral deterioration schizophrenic: of or pertaining to schizophrenia schizophrenic reaction/schizophrenia: psychosis characterized by withdrawal from external reality and a retreat into a fantasy life, with deterioration of behavior schoolboy (slang): codeine sciatica: pain along the sciatic nerve sciatic nerve: nerve of the lower spine that traverses the hips and runs down the back of the thigh of each leg sclera: the firm outer coat of the eye continuous with the cornea, visible as the white of the eye sclerose: to harden and thicken, as tissue sclerosis: abnormal thickening and hardening of tissue, as of the lining of arteries sclerosis, amyotrophic lateral/Lou Gehrig's disease: disease characterized by increasing muscle weakness (atrophy) or paralysis, caused by the progressive degeneration of motor nerve cells in the brain and spinal cord scoliosis: spine, lateral curvature scratch test: skin test for allergic response to different substances by applying suspected allergens in diluted form to scratches scrofula: tuberculosis of the lymph nodes, especially of the neck scrotum: pouch that contains the testicles scrub nurse: operating room nurse authorized to handle sterilized equipment in assisting the surgeon scurvy: disease characterized by livid spots under the skin, swollen and bleeding gums, and prostration, caused by lack of vitamin C seasickness: motion sickness sebaceous cyst: hard, round, movable mass contained in a sac, resulting from accumulated oil from a blocked sebaceous gland duct sebaceous gland: gland within the dermis that secretes oil (sebum) for lubricating the skin and hair seborrhea: abnormal increase of secretion from the sebaceous skin glands sebum: fatty lubricating substance secreted by the sebaceous glands secondary: produced as an effect or complication of another condition, as distinguished from primary.
secondary disease: disorder of a target gland caused by an excess or deficiency of a stimulating hormone supplied by the anterior pituitary gland sedation: reduction of sensitivity to pain, stress, etc., by administering a sedative sedative: medicine for allaying irritation or nervousness seizure: see convulsion semen: thick, whitish fluid containing spermatozoa that is ejaculated by the male at orgasm semicircular canals: three fluid-filled tubes of the inner ear that govern the sense of balance and communicate with the vestibular nerve seminal fluid: see semen seminal vesicle: one of two small pouches on either side of the prostate gland that serve to store spermatozoa temporarily senile macula degeneration: visual defect affecting the elderly senile psychosis/senile dementia: mental disorder of the aged characterized by progressive deterioration of the personality, irritability, loss of memory, etc.
senile purpura: small hemorrhages in the skin of older people senility: state of being senile separated retina: detached retina sepsis: infection of the blood by disease-causing microorganisms septicemia: blood poisoning septic shock: shock resulting from infection of the blood by disease-causing microorganisms septum: dividing wall between two cavities, as in the nose serous: pertaining to, producing, or resembling serum serous membrane: membrane producing serum serratus muscles: muscles that run vertically along the ribs serum: the watery, clear portion of blood or lymph serum analysis: laboratory analysis of blood serum as a diagnostic aid serum sickness: acute illness caused by reaction to serum, such as that used in inoculations sex act: see sexual intercourse sex glands: see ovaries; testicles sexual intercourse/coitus: male's ejaculation of semen into a female's vagina sexuality: sexual interest or activity shingles/herpes zoster: acute viral infection and inflammation of a sensory nerve, characterized by pain and small blisters on the skin along the path of the nerve shock, allergic: allergic shock shock, cardiac: shock resulting from diminished heart function shock, circulatory: emergency condition in which the circulation of the blood is so disrupted that all bodily functions are affected sick headache: see migraine sickle-cell anemia: hereditary disease occurring most commonly among black men and women, in which many or a majority of the red blood cells are sickle-shaped, producing chronic anemia sickle-cell trait/sicklemia: trait in the genetic make-up of an individual that could cause sickle-cell anemia in his or her offspring if the other parent also has the trait sigmoid: 1. (adj.) shaped like the letter S 2. (n.) (sigmoid colon/sigmoid flexure) S-shaped fold in the colon of the large intestine just above the rectum sigmoid colon: see sigmoid 2 sigmoid flexure: see sigmoid 2 sigmoidoscope: surgical instrument for examining the interior of the sigmoid sign: (of disease) observable or objective manifestation, as distinguished from symptoms reported by the patient silica: extremely hard mineral, the chief constituent of quartz and sand silicosis: lung disorder, a form of pneumoconiosis, caused by inhaling silica dust, as of stone or sand simple fracture: closed fracture sinoatrial node: sinus node sinus: opening or cavity, as in bone, or a channel or passageway, as for blood sinusitis: inflammation of a sinus sinus node/sinoatrial node: small mass of nerve tissue in the right atrium of the heart that triggers heart contractions and regulates heartbeat, thus serving as cardiac pacemaker sitz bath: hot bath taken in a sitting position skeletal muscle/voluntary muscle: striated muscle attached to bones and joints, used chiefly in voluntary action skeleton, appendicular: the bones of the arms, hands, legs, and feet skeleton, axial: the bones of the head and the trunk skin/integument: the outer, membranous covering of the body, consisting of an outer layer (epidermis) and inner layer (dermis) skin-popping (slang): subcutaneous injection of heroin sleep disorders: see insomnia; narcolepsy sleeping pill: sedative, especially one of the barbiturates taken to relieve insomnia sleeping sickness/trypanosomiasis: tropical African disease caused by certain protozoa and spread by the bite of the tsetse fly, characterized by lethargy, recurrent fever, and oppressive drowsiness, often fatal sleepwalking/somnambulism: act of walking in one's sleep slip lamp microscope/biomicroscope: microscope for examining the eye, as the cornea, with the aid of an intense beam of light smack (slang): heroin smallpox/variola: acute, highly contagious viral disease characterized by high fever and the eruption of deep-seated pustules that leave scars upon healing smegma: cheesy secretion that may collect under the prepuce of the uncircumcised penis or of the clitoris smooth muscle/involuntary muscle: nonstriated muscle, used chiefly in involuntary action, such as that of the stomach and intestines social worker(s): person trained to work in a clinical, social, or recreational service for improving community welfare or aiding the rehabilitation or emotional adjustment of individuals sociopathic/psychopathic: describing a personality disorder in which the individual characteristically lacks a sense of personal responsibility or morality and may be disposed to aggressive and violent behavior, to self-destructive behavior, or to sexual deviation sodium amytal: chemical used as sedative for soldiers in World War I sodium cyclamate: see cyclamate sodium Pentothal: see Pentothal soft spots: fontanels soldier's disease: morphinism somnambulism: see sleepwalking soot-wart: name for cancer of the scrotum that afflicted 18th-century chimney sweeps sore throat: see pharyngitis spasm: involuntary convulsive contraction of muscles, called clonic when alternately contracted and relaxed, and tonic when persistently contracted spastic: of or characteristic of spasms spasticity: the condition of having spasms specimen: sample, as of blood, sputum, etc., for laboratory analysis speculum: instrument that dilates a passage of the body, as for examination speech reading: lip reading speed (slang): methamphetamine speed freak (slang): heavy user of methamphetamine (speed), especially by intravenous injection, to induce altered mental state sperm: spermatozoa spermatozoa (sing., spermatozoon)/sperm/sperm cells: male reproductive cells or gametes, one of which must fertilize an ovum to produce an embryo sperm cell: the male reproductive cell, one of the spermatozoa sperm cells: spermatozoa sperm ducts: vas deferens spermicide: contraceptive substance that destroys sperm sphincter(s): ringlike muscles surrounding an opening or tube that serves to narrow or close it sphygmomanometer: device for measuring arterial blood pressure spinal: see spinal anesthesia spinal anesthesia/spinal: form of anesthesia in which the patient is injected in the region of the spinal cord spinal arthritis: arthritis of the spine, found especially in the elderly spinal column/backbone/spine: the series of segmented bones (vertebrae) which enclose the spinal cord and provide support for the ribs spinal cord: the part of the central nervous system within the spinal column spinal fluid: see cerebrospinal fluid spinal fluid exam: spinal tap spinal puncture: spinal tap spinal reflex: reaction to an outside stimulus that originates in the spinal cord and bypasses the brain spinal tap/lumbar puncture/spinal fluid exam/spinal puncture: needle puncture and withdrawal of cerebrospinal fluid from the lower spinal column for diagnostic examination spine: see spinal column spirochete: any of various spiral-shaped bacteria, some of which cause syphilis and yaws spleen: vascular, ductless organ located near the stomach that produces red blood cells in infancy and modifies blood composition splint: appliance for supporting or immobilizing a part of the body, as a fractured bone spondylitis: inflammation of the vertebrae of the spine spondylitis, rheumatoid/ankylosing: chronic disease characterized by inflammation of the spine and resulting in the fusing (ankylosing) of the spinal joints spondylolisthesis: forward displacement of one of the lower vertebrae over the vertebra below it or over the sacrum, causing severe pain in the lower back spontaneous abortion: miscarriage sporadic: characterized by scattered cases, as of a disease, rather than by concentration in one area spore: single-celled reproductive body of a flowerless plant, capable of developing into an independent organism sprain: the stretching or rupturing of ligaments, usually accompanied by damage to blood vessels sputum: expectorated matter, as saliva, sometimes mixed with mucus sputum exam: bacteriological, chemical, and microscopic testing of sputum for presence of disease stapedius: small muscle in the tympanum of the middle ear whose function is to dampen loud sounds stapes: stirrup staph: see staphylococcus staphylococcus (pl., staphylococci)/ staph: parasitic bacterium that can cause boils and other infections staphylococcus aureus: bacterium that causes food poisoning startle reflex: see startle response startle response/startle reflex: complex involuntary reaction to sudden noise occurring especially in infancy, where it is marked by a sudden jerk of the arms and legs static exercises: isometrics status epilepticus: series of epileptic seizures, occurring virtually without interruption stenosis: the narrowing of a duct or canal in the body sterile: 1. being incapable of producing offspring 2. being free of germs sterility: 1. condition of being incapable of producing offspring 2. condition of being free of germs sterilization: the process of destroying reproductive capacity by surgical means, as by tying the Fallopian tubes of a woman (tubal ligation) or by tying the seminal duct of a man (vasectomy)

steroid(s): any of a group of organic compounds occurring naturally and produced synthetically, including the sex hormones, the bile acids, oral contraceptives, and many drugs stethoscope: diagnostic device that conducts sounds produced within the body, as the heartbeat, to the ear of the examiner stiff toe: pain and stiffness in the joint of the big toe stilbestrol: see diethylstilbestrol Still's disease: see rheumatoid arthritis, juvenile stimulant: drug or other substance that increases or agitates the physiological processes of body or mind stimulus (pl., stimuli): that which initiates an impulse or affects the activity of an organism stirrup/stapes: the innermost of the three ossicles of the middle ear, the bone between the anvil and the cochlea Stokes-Adams syndrome: sudden unconsciousness and sometimes convulsions caused by heart block stoma: small opening in a surface, as in a membrane or wall of a blood vessel stomach, ulcers of: see peptic ulcer stool exam: laboratory analysis of feces, as for presence of blood or parasitic organisms STP: DOM
strabismus/squint: disorder of the eye muscles in which one eye drifts so that its position is not parallel with the other strain: excessive stretching of a muscle, tendon, or ligament stratum corneum: the outermost layer of the epidermis, consisting of horny, lifeless cells strep throat: streptococcal infection of the throat streptococcal: of or relating to the streptococcus bacterium streptococcus: kind of bacteria including some forms that cause diseases, as pneumonia and scarlet fever stress fracture: tiny crack in a bone caused by repeated stress striated: striped, as certain muscle striated muscle: see skeletal muscle striped muscle: see skeletal muscle stripping: surgical removal of lengths of varicosed veins, especially one of the saphenous veins of the leg stroke/apoplexy: attack of paralysis caused by the rupture of an artery and hemorrhage into the brain, or by an obstruction of an artery, as from a blood clot stupor: condition in which the senses and faculties are suspended or greatly dulled, as from shock, drugs, etc.
sty: small, inflamed swelling of a sebaceous gland on the edge of the eyelid subacute: intermediate between acute and chronic: said of a disease subarachnoid: situated or occurring between the middle layer (arachnoid) and the innermost layer (pia mater) of the brain subcutaneous: situated or applied beneath the skin subcutaneous injection: an injection given in the subcutaneous tissue beneath the skin subcutaneous tissue: layer of fatty tissue below the skin (dermis) which acts as an insulator against heat and cold and as a shock absorber against injury subdural: situated or occurring between the outermost layer (dura mater) and the middle layer (arachnoid) of the brain subdural hematoma: see hematoma, subdural subjective: (of symptoms) of a kind that only the patient is aware of sublingual gland: either of a pair of salivary glands located beneath the tongue submandibular gland: submaxillary gland submaxillary gland/submandibular gland: either of a pair of salivary glands located under each side of the lower jaw subtotal: less than total, as a surgical procedure involving the excision of an organ or part sudden infant death syndrome/crib death/SIDS: death of an infant, usually between one and six months of age, without any preceding sign of distress and of undetermined cause sudoriferous glands: see sweat gland sulfa drug: any of a group of organic compounds used in the treatment of a variety of bacterial infections sulfonamide(s): any of a group of chemical compounds including the sulfa drugs, used in the treatment of bacterial infections sulfonylurea: drug used to treat diabetes sunstroke/heatstroke: condition marked by an acutely high fever and the cessation of perspiration, caused by prolonged exposure to heat and sometimes leading to convulsions and coma superego/conscience: largely unconscious element of the personality, regarded as dominating the ego, for which it acts principally in the role of conscience and critic superficial: of, situated near, or on the surface superior vena cava: the large vein that brings blood from the upper part of the body to the heart supination: rotation of the hand or forearm so that the palm of the hand faces upward or forward supine: lying on the back, with the face upward suppository: solid, usually cylindrical medicated preparation that liquefies from heat after insertion in a body cavity, as the rectum or the vagina suppuration: the formation of pus suppurative: characterized by the formation of pus; pussy surgeon: physician who specializes in the diagnosis and treatment of disease by means of surgery surgery: the branch of medicine dealing with the correction of disorders or other physical change by operation or manipulation surgical: of or relating to surgery surgical diathermy: electrosurgery suture: 1. to sew together cut or separated edges, as of a wound, to promote healing 2. the thread, wire, gut, etc., used in this process suture line: line formed by the edges of the separate bones of a baby's skull sweat gland/sudoriferous gland: any of numerous glands that secrete sweat, found almost everywhere in the skin except for the lips and a few other areas swimmer's itch: mild form of schistosomiasis in which parasitic fluke worm larvae invade the skin of swimmers, causing dermatitis sycosis/barber's itch: bacterial infection of hair follicles, marked by inflammation, itching, and the formation of pus-filled pimples sympathetic nervous system: the part of the autonomic nervous system that controls such involuntary actions as the dilation of pupils, constriction of blood vessels and salivary glands, and increase of heartbeat symptom: change in one's normal feeling or condition of well-being, indicating the presence of disease symptomatic: having observable symptoms of a disease or condition symptomatology: the combined symptoms of a disease Synanon: organized live-in community of drug addicts in which group psychotherapy is used to encourage rehabilitation synapse: the junction point between two neurons, across which a nerve impulse passes from the axon of one neuron to the dendrite of another syncope: temporary loss of consciousness; fainting syndrome: set of symptoms occurring at the same period and indicating the presence or nature of a disease synovia/synovial fluid: viscid, transparent fluid secreted as a lubricating agent in the interior of joints and elsewhere synovial aspiration/synovial fluid exam: laboratory analysis of synovia, withdrawn from joints by needle, in order to diagnose gout or certain forms of arthritis synovial fluid: synovia synovial fluid exam: synovial aspiration syphilis: contagious venereal disease transmitted by sexual contact and congenitally to offspring of infected mothers systemic: pertaining to or affecting the body as a whole systole: the instant of peak pumping action of the heart, when the ventricles contract and blood is impelled outward into the arteries, followed immediately by relaxation (diastole) systolic pressure: measure of blood pressure taken when the heart is contracting; the higher of the two figures in a reading

tabes dorsalis/locomotor ataxia: form of syphilis involving demyelination of spinal nerves and other destructive changes in the spinal cord tachycardia: abnormally rapid heartbeat tachycardia, paroxysmal: attacks of abnormally rapid heartbeat (tachycardia) that begin and end abruptly Tagamet: cimetidine

tampon: plug of absorbent material for insertion in a body cavity or wound to stop bleeding or absorb secretions
T and A operation: see adenotonsillectomy tapeworm/cestode: any of various worms with segmented, ribbonlike bodies, often of considerable length, that are parasitic on the intestines of humans and other vertebrates target gland: any of the endocrine glands that function when stimulated by hormones secreted by the anterior pituitary, as the thyroid adrenal cortex, testicles, or ovaries tarsal: any of the bones of the tarsus, or ankle tarsus: ankle
taste bud: one of the clusters of cells in the tongue that contain receptors for discriminating salt, sweet, sour, or bitter tastes teething: process by which new teeth break (erupt) through the gums in infants and young children tempered glass: safety glass that has high resistance to blunt objects and breaks by crumbling into small fragments instead of shattering temporal lobe: the portion of each cerebral hemisphere of the brain in back of and partly below the frontal lobes, the centers for hearing temporal lobe convulsions: convulsions, psychomotor tendinitis: inflammation of a tendon tendon: band of tough, fibrous connective tissue that binds a muscle to another part, as a bone, and by means of which muscular force can be exerted on other parts of the body tendon sheath, inflammation of: tenosynovitis tennis elbow: pain in the outer side of the elbow joint, usually caused by a too vigorous twisting motion of the hand that strains a tendon or inflames a bursa tenosynovitis: inflammation of the sheath that covers a tendon tension headache: severe headache induced by tension, which causes unconscious constriction of head and neck muscles Terramycin: trade name for the antibiotic tetracycline testes: testicles testicle(s)/testis(pl., testes): one of a pair of male reproductive glands (gonads) that produce spermatozoa and male sex hormones, situated in a pouch (scrotum) at the base of the penis testis: see testicle testosterone: male sex hormone manufactured in the testicles tetanus/lockjaw: acute bacterial infection usually introduced through a puncture wound leading to muscle spasms, especially of the jaw muscles, and often fatal tetany: nerve disorder characterized by muscle spasms and sometimes convulsions, caused by too little calcium in the blood tetracycline: crystalline powder isolated from a soil bacillus that forms the base of several antibiotics, including Aureomycin and Terramycin tetrahydrocannabinol/THC: principal compound of cannabis (hashish or marihuana), believed to be the active ingredient thalamus: round mass of gray matter at the base of the brain that transmits sensory impulses to the cerebral cortex thalassemia/Cooley's anemia: form of anemia caused by inherited abnormality of red blood cells, often fatal in utero THC: tetrahydrocannabinol therapeutic: designed or tending to heal or to cure disease therapist: see psychotherapist therapy: treatment of a disease by prescribed method or medicine thermogram: measurement of the surface temperature of a region of the body, such as the breast, with an infrared sensing device thermography: technique of measuring the surface temperature of a region of the body, such as the breast, with an infrared sensing device thiamine/vitamin B_1: vitamin found in cereal grains, green peas, liver, egg yolk, and other sources, and also made synthetically, that protects against beriberi thoracic: of or relating to the thorax, or chest cavity thoracic cage: see rib cage thoracic cavity: see chest cavity thoracic spine: see vertebrae, thoracic thoracic surgeon: surgeon specializing in thoracic surgery, having to do with the chest cavity thoracic surgery: branch of surgery having to do with the chest cavity and its organs, the heart and lungs, and large blood vessels thorax: chest
Thorazine/chlorpromazine: trademark for a commonly used tranquilizer throat: see pharynx throat, sore: see pharyngitis thrombin: enzyme present in the blood that reacts with fibrinogen to form fibrin in the process of clotting thrombocytes: platelets thromboembolism: obstruction of a blood vessel by a blood clot (thrombus) that has broken away from the place where it was formed thrombophlebitis: formation of a blood clot (thrombus) in the wall of an inflamed vein (phlebitis) thromboplastin: substance found in blood platelets that helps to convert pro-thrombin into thrombin in the clotting process thrombosis: formation of a blood clot (thrombus) in a blood vessel, resulting in the partial or complete blocking of circulation thrombus: stationary blood clot within a blood vessel thrush: fungus infection in the mouth, especially of infants, characterized by white patches that become sores thymectomy: surgical removal of the thymus thymus: glandlike, lymphoid organ located near the base of the neck, believed to play a role in the body's immunological responses thyroid gland: endocrine gland located at the neck just below the larynx, extending around the front and to either side of the trachea (windpipe), and secreting the hormone thyroxin, which is vital to growth and metabolism thyroid hormone: see thyroxin thyroid-stimulating hormone/TSH: hormone secreted by the anterior lobe of the pituitary gland which stimulates the production of hormones in the thyroid gland thyroxin: hormone secreted by the thyroid gland, vital to growth and metabolism tibia: the shin bone, the inner and larger of the two bones of the lower leg tic: involuntary, recurrent muscle twitch or spasm tic douloureux: see trigeminal neuralgia tick fever: see Rocky Mountain spotted fever tinea: ringworm
tinnitus: ringing, buzzing, hissing, or clicking sound in the ears, not caused by external stimuli tissue, death of: see gangrene tolerance: the ability of the body to adjust to increasingly larger doses of a drug through habitual use tomography: radiography of a section of the body tomography, computerized axial: see CT scanning tone/tonicity: the normal tension of muscle tissue tonic: of or characteristic of tonus tonicity: see tone tonic phase: the period during a grand mal epileptic convulsion when the body is rigid tonic spasm: see spasm tonometer: device for measuring pressure, as of the eyeball tonsil: either of two small round, lymphoid organs at each side of the back of the throat tonsillectomy: surgical removal of the tonsils tonsillitis: inflammation of the tonsils tonus: muscular spasm characterized by persistent contraction tophus (pl. tophi): deposit of urate in the joints, a cause of gout tourniquet: bandage or other material tied tightly to constrict an artery to stop bleeding toxemia of pregnancy: metabolic disorder of pregnant women, characterized by a rise in blood pressure, swelling of tissue, weight gain, and headaches (pre-eclampsia) and sometimes by convulsions and loss of consciousness (eclampsia) toxic: 1. caused by or having to do with a toxin or poison 2. poisonous toxic psychosis: psychosis caused by a toxic agent, such as lead or alcohol toxin(s): any of a group of poisonous compounds produced by animal, vegetable, or bacterial organisms trabecula (pl., trabeculae): strand of connective tissue, as in a bone trachea/windpipe: the passageway for air from the larynx to the lungs tracheostomy/tracheotomy: emergency surgical procedure of cutting into the trachea tracheotomy: see tracheostomy traction: subjection of muscle or a fractured part to a pulling force, as by a system of weights and pulleys tranquilizer: drug with a calming or sedative effect transference: in psychoanalysis, the redirection of repressed childhood emotions to the analyst transplant: tissue or organ transferred from its original site to another part of the body or to another individual transsexual: person who is genetically and physically of one sex but who identifies psychologically with the other and may seek treatment by surgery or with hormones to bring the physical sexual characteristics into conformity with the psychological preference transudate: fluid passing through pores or tissues, as of a membrane transverse colon: the section of the colon leading from the ascending colon and extending horizontally across the abdomen beneath the liver and stomach transvestism: practice of wearing the clothes of the opposite sex transvestite: one who wears the clothes of the opposite sex trauma: 1. any injury or wound to the body 2. severe emotional shock trematode: any of a class of parasitic flatworms, as the flukes, causing various diseases such as schistosomiasis tremor: any involuntary quivering or trembling, as of a muscle trench foot: foot condition resembling frostbite resulting from exposure to continued dampness and cold trench mouth/Vincent's angina/Vincent's disease: painful infection of the gums (called necrotizing ulcerative gingivitis) and sometimes of the pharynx and palate, characterized by the formation of ulcers and necrosis trichina: Trichinella spiralis Trichinella spiralis/trichina: the parasitic worm that causes trichinosis trichinosis: disease caused by a parasitic worm (Trichinella spiralis) that enters the body via under-cooked or raw meat, especially pork, invading the intestines and muscles and provoking gastrointestinal symptoms initially and muscle stiffness and pain later trichomonas: genus of protozoa that cause vaginal infections in women trichomoniasis: vaginal infection by the trichomonas organism triglyceride: glycerol compound containing one to three acids trimester: period of three months, used to identify the progress of a pregnancy which consists of three such periods trip (slang): hallucinogenic experience trivalent: pertaining to a form of the Sabin polio vaccine in which each dose gives protection against three strains of polio trophoblast: layer of cells developing around a fertilized ovum and contributing to the formation of the placenta trophoblastic disease: disease of the trophoblast in a pregnant woman, marked by the degeneration of the placenta into a mass of grapelike cysts (hydatidiform mole) true skin: dermis trypanosomiasis: sleeping sickness tropanosomiasis, African: see sleeping sickness tropanosomiasis, American: see Chagas' disease trypsin: enzyme in the pancreatic juice that breaks up proteins for digestion TSH: thyroid-stimulating hormone

tubal insufflation/Rubin's test: the injection of carbon dioxide gas, or sometimes ordinary air into the uterus to check for obstructions in the Fallopian tubes tubal ligation: the tying or binding of a tube, especially of the Fallopian tubes as a method of sterilization tubercle: small nodule or tumor formed within an organ, as that produced by the bacillus causing tuberculosis tubercle bacillus: rod-shaped bacterium that causes tuberculosis tuberculin: liquid containing substances extracted from weakened (attenuated) tubercle bacilli, used as a test for tuberculosis tuberculin test: skin test for determining whether tuberculosis bacteria are present, used especially for children tuberculoid: of or resembling a tubercle or tuberculosis tuberculosis: infectious, communicable disease caused by the tubercle bacillus and characterized by the formation of tubercles within some organ or tissue, often the lungs (pulmonary tuberculosis) tubule(s): very narrow, minute tube or duct of kidney tularemia: acute bacterial infection that can be transmitted to humans from infected rabbits, squirrels, or other animals, by the bite of certain flies, or by direct contact tumor: mass of tissue growing independently of surrounding tissue and having no physiological function, sometimes confined to the area of origin (benign) and sometimes invading other cells and tissue and causing their degeneration (malignant) tumor, fibroid: benign tumor composed of fibrous tissue, usually attached to the wall of the uterus turbinate: one of the thin, curved bones on the walls of the nasal passages tympanum: 1. the cavity in the middle ear lined with the tympanic membrane (eardrum) and containing the ossicles 2. eardrum tympanic membrane: see eardrum typhoid fever/enteric fever: acute infectious disease caused by a Salmonella bacterium and characterized by diarrhea, fever, eruption of bright red spots on the chest and abdomen, and physical prostration typhus: acute disease caused by a rickettsial microorganism that is transmitted to humans by the bite of certain lice and fleas, and is characterized by high fever, severe headaches, and a red rash ulcer(s): open sore with an inflamed base on an external or internal body surface ulcer(s) of gastrointestinal tract: see peptic ulcers ulcerative colitis: colitis accompanied by ulcerated lesions on the colon, characterized by bloody diarrhea and abdominal pain ulna: the bone of the forearm on the same side as the little finger, longer and thinner than the radius bone umbilical: pertaining to the middle part of the abdomen umbilical cord: the ropelike tissue connecting the navel of the fetus with the placenta umbilicus: navel unconsciousness: loss of consciousness, having the appearance of sleep, usually caused by injury, shock, or serious physical disturbance underskin: tissue, subcutaneous undulant fever: see brucellosis unsaturated: (of fats) not tending to increase the cholesterol content of the blood ups/uppers/pep pills (slang): drugs or compounds that have a stimulating effect on the central nervous system, such as amphetamines urate: salt of uric acid urea: soluble compound containing nitrogen, found in urine and in small amounts in the blood uremia: toxic condition of the blood caused by the failure of the kidneys to function normally in filtering and excreting waste products, such as urea ureter: either of two narrow, muscular ducts which convey urine from the kidneys to the bladder urethra: duct from the bladder by which urine is discharged and which in males carries seminal fluid urethritis: inflammation of the urethra urinalysis (UA): chemical and microscopic analysis of the urine to determine for diagnostic purposes whether it is normally constituted urination: the excretion of urine urine: waste products and excess water separated in the kidneys and stored in the bladder for eventual elimination from the body urinogenital tract/genitourinary tract/urogenital tract: the urinary and genital systems, including the kidneys, ureters, bladder, urethra, vagina and associated parts urogenital tract: urinogenital tract urologist: physician specializing in urology urology: the branch of medical science that deals with the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the kidneys, bladder, ureters, urethra, and of the male reproductive organs urticaria: see hives uterine: of or pertaining to the uterus uterus/womb: muscular, glandular organ in women in which the developing fetus is protected until birth uvula: fleshy, teardrop-shaped appendage of the soft palate at the back of the mouth vaccinate: inoculate with a vaccine as a preventive or therapeutic measure vaccination: 1. act or process of vaccinating 2. scar produced at the site of inoculation with a vaccine vaccine: preparation of live, attenuated, or dead microorganisms injected or administered orally to create immunity against a specific disease vacuum aspiration: technique of inducing abortion in early pregnancy by utilizing suction to draw out embryo tissue vagina: canal in the female leading from the external genital orifice below the pubis to the uterus vaginal sponge: contraceptive device made of polyurethane permeated with spermicide nonoxynol-9 vaginitis: inflammation of the vagina vagotomy: surgical procedure of cutting the vagus nerves vagus: the tenth cranial nerve, which originates in the brain and extends branches to the lungs, heart, stomach, and intestines Valium/diazepam: trademark for commonly used tranquilizer Valmid: ethinamate valve: membranous structure inside a vessel or other organ, as the heart, allowing fluid to flow in one direction only valve, disease of: endocarditis vaporizers: see steam inhalators varicose: abnormally dilated, as veins varicose ulcer: ulcer resulting from varicose veins, usually on the inner side of the leg above the ankle varicose vein/varix: swollen and contorted vein, often in the leg varicosity: 1. condition of being varicose 2. see varicose vein variola: smallpox varix (pl., varices): varicose vein vascular: of, involving, or supplied with vessels, as blood vessels vascularization: process of becoming vascular vascular surgeon: surgeon specializing in vascular surgery, having to do with the blood vessels vascular surgery: branch of surgery having to do with the operative treatment of diseases of the blood vessels vas deferens: duct in males that conveys semen from the testicles to the seminal vesicles vasectomy: surgical removal of part of the vas deferens or sperm duct of the male, thus rendering him sterile by preventing semen from reaching the seminal vesicles vasoconstrictor: medicine that causes the blood vessels to contract, thus restricting blood flow vasodilator: medicine that causes the blood vessels to dilate, thus producing greater blood flow vasomotor: producing contraction or dilation of the blood vessels vasopressin: hormone secreted by the posterior lobe of the pituitary gland that raises blood pressure and increases peristalsis, known also as antidiuretic hormone because of its action on the kidneys to stimulate the reabsorption of water VD: see venereal disease vector cardiogram: graph indicating the magnitude and direction of the electrical currents of the heart vein(s): any of a large number of muscular, tubular vessels conveying blood from all parts of the body to the heart vein, pulmonary: vein that delivers oxygen-rich blood from the lungs to the heart velum: soft palate

vena cava: either of two large veins that bring blood to the heart from the upper part of the body (superior vena cava) and lower part of the body (inferior vena cava) venereal disease: any of those diseases transmitted by sexual intercourse, such as syphilis and gonorrhea venereal wart/condyloma acuminatum: wart caused by a virus and occurring in the anal and genital areas, transmitted by sexual contact and by other means venesection: see phlebotomy venom: poison secreted by certain reptiles, insects, etc., transferred to a victim by a bite or sting venous: having to do with or carried by the veins ventral: toward, near, or in the abdomen ventricle(s): any of various body cavities, as of the brain, or chambers, especially either of the two lower chambers of the heart, which receive blood from the atria and pump it into the arteries ventriculography: technique of X raying the brain after the removal of cerebrospinal fluid and the injection of air into the ventricles venule: small vein continuous with a capillary vermiform appendix/appendix vermiformis: the worm-shaped appendage attached to the cecum of the large intestine vermifuge: any drug or remedy that destroys intestinal worms vernix caseosa: cheesy substance sometimes covering a newborn baby's skin vertebra (pl., vertebrae): one of the segmented bones that make up the spinal column vertebra, thoracic/thoracic spine: the vertebra to which the ribs are attached vertebrate: any animal having a backbone vertigo: disorder in which a person feels as if self or surroundings are whirling around vesical: of or pertaining to the bladder vesicle: small bladderlike cavity, or a small sac containing fluid vestibular nerve: the part of the auditory nerve leading from the vestibule of the inner ear to the brain, controlling equilibrium vestibule: space or cavity, as within the labyrinth of the inner ear vestigial: of the nature of a remnant of an organ that is no longer functional viable: capable of living and developing normally, as a newborn infant vibrissae (sing., vibrissa): hairs that grow in the nasal cavity villi (sing., villus): minute, hairlike structures on the mucous membrane of the small intestine that absorb nutrients Vincent's angina: see trench mouth Vincent's disease: see trench mouth virulent: 1. severe and rapid in its progress, as a disease 2. highly infectious, as a disease-causing microorganism virus (pl., viruses): any of a large group of particles too small to be seen by an ordinary microscope, that are typically inert except when in contact with certain living cells, and that can cause a variety of infectious diseases viscera: 1. the internal organs of the body, as the stomach, lungs, heart, etc. 2. the intestines visceral: pertaining to the viscera viscid: sticky or adhesive viscous: semifluid or gluelike in texture visual purple: reddish purple protein found in the rods of the retina, especially important to night vision visual radiations: smaller nerve bundles that split off from the optic nerve and enter the occipital lobes of the brain vitalometer: device for measuring sensitivity of a tooth vital signs: measurement of body temperature, pulse rate, and respiration vitamin(s): any of a group of complex organic substances found in minute quantities in most natural foods and closely associated with the maintenance of normal physiological functions vitamin A: vitamin found in green and yellow vegetables, dairy products, liver and fish liver oils, that prevents atrophy of epithelial tissue and protects against night blindness vitamin B_1: thiamine vitamin B_2: riboflavin vitamin B_{12}: vitamin extracted from liver and believed to protect against pernicious anemia vitamin B complex: group of water-soluble vitamins including thiamine and riboflavin vitamin C: see ascorbic acid vitamin D: vitamin that protects against rickets, found in fish liver oils, butter, egg yolks, and specially treated cow's milk, and also produced in the body on exposure to sunlight vitamin E: vitamin found in whole grain cereals, legume seeds, corn oil, egg yolks, meat, and milk, sometimes called the anti-sterility vitamin because its absence in rats causes sterility vitamin K: vitamin that promotes the clotting of blood and is found in green leafy vegetables vitiligo/piebald skin: skin disorder characterized by a loss of pigment in sharply defined areas vitreous humor: the transparent, jellylike tissue that fills the posterior chamber or ball of the eye and is enclosed by the hyaloid membrane vocal cords/vocal folds: two bands of ligaments extending across the larynx which, when tense, are made to vibrate by the passage of air, thereby producing voice vocal folds: see vocal cords voice box: larynx void: excrete waste, especially urine voluntary muscle: see skeletal muscle volvulus: obstruction of the intestines caused by twisting vomitus: vomited substance vulva: the external genitals of the female, located beneath the front part of the pelvis walking pneumonia: mild viral pneumonia that does not confine the patient to bed walleye: strabismus characterized by a tendency of the eyes to turn outward, away from the nose wart: small, usually hard, benign growth formed on and rooted in the skin, caused by a virus Wasserman test: blood test for the presence of the organism causing syphilis water blister: blister beneath the epidermis that contains lymph

"water pills": diuretics wet dream/nocturnal emission: male's involuntary expulsion of semen while asleep wheal: raised area on the skin, as from hives or an insect bite, usually transitory and characterized by itching whiplash: injury to neck ligaments, usually caused by a sudden jolt to the neck, as in automobile accidents white blood cells: see leukocytes white corpuscle: see leukocyte white of eye: see sclera white lung disease: byssinosis WHO: World Health Organization whooping cough/pertussis: respiratory, bacterial disease of children marked by paroxysms of coughing ending with a sharp sound (or "whoop") upon intake of breath whooping cough/pertussis, immunization against: see DPT injections Wilms' tumor/nephroblastoma: malignant tumor of the kidney, found especially in children windpipe: see trachea wisdom tooth: the last tooth, or third molar on either side of the upper and lower jaws withdrawal symptom: any of the symptoms caused by the withdrawal of a physically addictive drug from an addict, as tremors, sweating, chills, vomiting, and diarrhea womb: see uterus
wood alcohol: methyl alcohol writer's cramp: spasmodic contraction of the muscles of the fingers and hand, caused by excessive writing xenograft: see heterograft xenophobia: fear of strangers xerography: method of reproducing an image of electrostatic attraction, used experimentally as a diagnostic tool xeroradiogram: picture developed by xeroradiography xeroradiography: diagnostic procedure utilizing xerography to develop X-ray pictures

X ray: 1. to examine, diagnose, or treat with X rays 2. photograph made with X rays
X rays: electromagnetic radiations of extremely short wavelengths, used to reproduce on photosensitive film images of the internal organs and the skeleton as an aid in the detection, diagnosis, and treatment of certain disorders

Yang: in the Chinese philosophy underlying acupuncture, the masculine principle, identified with activity
yaws: infectious tropical disease that is not venereal but is caused by the syphilis bacterium (spirochete), characterized by rheumatic pains and ulcerating sores of the skin yellow fever: acute, infectious, intestinal disease of tropical and semi-tropical regions, caused by a virus transmitted by the bite of a mosquito, and characterized by jaundice and hemorrhages yellow marrow: marrow
Yin: in the Chinese philosophy underlying acupuncture, the female principle, identified with passivity

zymase: enzyme, obtained principally from yeast, important in fermentation

Generic Drugs

Name	Action	Prescribed for
Trade Names (CD) = combined drug)
Acetaminophen	Believed to reduce concentration of chemicals involved in production of pain, fever, and inflammation (analgesic; antipyretic)	Relief of mild to moderate pain; reduction of fever
Anacin-3 Bancap (CD) Capital (CD) Codalan (CD) Co-Gesic (CD) Comtrex (CD) Congesprin (CD) for children	Co-Tylenol (CD) Darvocet-N (CD) Datril Dolacet (CD) Dorcol (CD) for children Dristan (CD) Esgic (CD) Excedrin (CD) Hycomine (CD) Hyco-Pap (CD) Lorcet (CD) Midrin (CD) Pacaps (CD) Percocet (CD) Percogesic (CD)	Penaphen (CD) Protid (CD) Repan (CD) Sinarest (CD) Sine-Aid (CD) Sinutab (CD) Talacen (CD) Tylenol Tylenol Infant Drops Tylenol Junior Strength Tylox (CD) Unisom (CD) Vicodin (CD) Wygesic (CD)
Alprazolam	Believed to depress the central nervous system, slowing nervous response, and relieving nervousness and tension	Relief of anxiety attacks and insomnia; reduction of symptoms of chronic anxiety
Xanax
Amitriptyline	Believed to restore to normal levels the constituents of brain tissue that transmit nerve impulses (antidepressant)	Relief of emotional depression; gradual improvement of mood
Elavil Endep Etrafon (CD)	Limbitral (CD) Triavil (CD)
Ampicillin	Interferes with ability of susceptible bacteria to produce new protective cell walls as they grow and multiply (antibiotic)	Elimination of infections responsive to action of this drug
Omnipen Polycillin	Principen Unasyn
Antacids (Aluminum Hydroxide) (Calcium Carbonate) (Sodium Bicarbonate)	Neutralizes stomach acid; reduces action of digestive enzyme pepsin (relief from gastric hyperacidity)	Relief of heartburn, sour stomach, acid indigestion, and discomfort associated with peptic ulcer, gastritis, esophagitis, hiatal hernia
Absorbable: Sodium bicarbonate: Alka-Seltzer	Brioschi Bromo-Seltzer Less absorbable: Aluminum hydroxide:	Amphojel Calcium carbonate: Alka-2 Amitone
Aspirin (Acetylsalicylic Acid)	Dilates blood vessels in skin, thus hastening loss of body heat (antipyretic); reduces tissue concentration of inflammation and pain (analgesic; antirheumatic)	Reduction of fever; relief of mild to moderate pain and inflammation; prevention of blood clots, as in phlebitis, heart attack, stroke
Bayer Easprin Empirin St. Joseph's Children's Aspirin Alka-Seltzer (CD) Anacin (CD)	Ascriptin (CD) Axotal (CD) Buff-A Comp (CD) Bufferin (CD) Congespirin (CD) for children Darvon (CD) Ecotrin Equagesic (CD) Excedrin (CD) 4-Way Cold Tablets (CD) Fiorinal (CD) Midol (CD) Norgesic (CD)	Percodan (CD) Robaxisal (CD) Soma Compound (CD) Supac (CD) Synalgos-DC (CD) Talwin (CD) Zorprin
Atropine (Belladonna, Hyoscyamine)	Prevents stimulation of muscular contractions and glandular secretions in organ involved (antispasmodic [anticholinergic])	Relief of discomfort associated with excessive activity and spasm of digestive tract; irritation and spasm of lower urinary tract; painful menstruation
Antrocol (CD) Arco-Lase Plus (CD) Donnagel-PG (CD)	Donnatal (CD) Donnatal Donnazyme (CD) Lomotil (CD)	Ru-Tuss (CD) SK-Diphenoxylate (CD) Urised (CD)
Bendroflumethiazide	Increases elimination of salt and water (diuretic); relaxes walls of smaller arteries, allowing them to expand; combined effect lowers blood pressure (antihypertensive)	Elimination of excessive fluid retention (edema); reduction of high blood pressure
Naturetin	Corzide (CD) Rauzide (CD)
Beta-Adrenergic Blocking Agents	Decreases physical responses at beta-adrenergic receptors, slowing heart rate, dilating the vascular and bronchial systems (antihypertensive); believed to reduce cardiac output and nervous system responses in some forms of the medication	Treatment of high blood pressure; medication to reduce the incidence of another attack in heart attack patients; prevention of migraine headaches in chronic sufferers of migraines
Blocadren Corgard	Lopressor Normodyne Sectral Tenormin	Visken

Name	Action	Prescribed for
Trade Names (CD = combined drug)
Brompheniramine	Blocks action of histamine after release from sensitized tissue cells, thus reducing intensity of allergic response (antihistamine)	Relief of symptoms of hay fever (allergic rhinitis) and of allergic reactions of skin (itching, swelling, hives, rash)
Dimetane Bromfed (CD)	Dimetapp (CD) Poly-histine-DX (CD)
Butabarbital	Believed to block transmission of nerve impulses (hypnotic; sedative)	Low dosage: relief of moderate anxiety or tension (sedative effect); higher dosage: at bedtime to induce sleep (hypnotic effect)
Butisol Pyridium Plus (CD)
Butalbital	Affects the actions of the central nervous system, relieving anxiety (anxiolytic), and relaxing muscles (barbiturate sedative)	Relief of headaches related to tension or stress, psychic tension; relaxation of muscle strain and contraction in the head, neck, and shoulders
Esgic (CD) Fioricet (CD) Fiorinal (CD)	Medigesic (CD) Phrenilin (CD) Repan (CD)	Sedapap (CD)
Caffeine	Constricts blood vessel walls; increases energy level of chemical systems responsible for nerve tissue activity (cardiac, respiratory, psychic stimulant)	Prevention and early relief of vascular headaches such as migraine; relief of drowsiness and mental fatigue
No-Doz Anacin (CD) Cafergot (CD)	Esgic (CD) Excedrin Extra Strength (CD)	Fiorinal (CD) Maximum Strength Midol (CD)	Pacaps (CD) Wigraine (CD) Vivarin
Carisoprodol	Believed to block transmission of nerve impulses and/or to produce a sedative effect (muscle relaxant)	Relief of discomfort caused by spasms of voluntary muscles
Soma (CD) Soma Compound (CD)
Chloral Hydrate	Believed to affect wake-sleep centers of brain (hypnotic)	Low dosage: relief of mild to moderate anxiety or tension (sedative effect); higher dosage: at bedtime to relieve insomnia (hypnotic effect)
SK-Chloral Hydrate
Chloramphenicol	Prevents growth and multiplication of susceptible bacteria by interfering with formation of their essential proteins (antibiotic)	Elimination of infections responsive to action of this drug
Chloromycetin Ophthochlor Ophthocort
Chlordiazepoxide	Believed to reduce activity of some parts of limbic system (tranquilizer)	Relief of mild to moderate anxiety and tension without significant sedation
Libritabs Librium Librax (CD)	Limbitrol (CD) Menrium (CD)
Chlorpheniramine	Blocks action of histamine after release from sensitized tissue cells, thus reducing intensity of allergic response (antihistamine)	Relief of symptoms of hay fever (allergic rhinitis) and of allergic reactions of skin (itching, swelling, hives, rash)
Chlor-Trimeton Teldrin Comtrex (CD) Contac Dristan (CD)	PediaCare (CD) for children Tylenol Cold Medication (CD)
Chlorpromazine	Believed to inhibit action of dopamine, thus correcting an imbalance of nerve impulse transmission thought to be responsible for certain mental disorders (antiemetic; tranquilizer)	Relief of severe anxiety, agitation, and psychotic behavior
Thorazine
Chlorzoxazone	Inhibits nerve responses that trigger muscle contractions	Pain relief of muscle tension and injuries to the muscles and joints; relaxation of muscular tension for use in combination with physical therapy
Paraflex	Parafon (CD) Remular
Codeine	Believed to affect tissue sites that react specifically with opium and its derivatives (antitussive; narcotic analgesic)	Relief of moderate pain; control of coughing
Acetaco (CD) Actifed with Codeine (CD) Ambenyl (CD) Calcidrine Syrup (CD) Codalan (CD) Codimal PH (CD) Dimetane-DC (CD)	Empirin with Codeine (CD) Fiorinal with Codeine (CD) IoTuss (CD) Naldecon-CX (CD) Novahistine DK (CD)	Nucofed (CD) Pediacof (CD) Phenaphen with Codeine (CD) Phenergan with Codeine (CD)	Promethazine (CD) Robitussin A-C (CD) Soma Compound (CD) Triaminic with Codeine (CD) Tussar (CD)	Tylenol with Codeine (CD)

Name	Action	Prescribed for
Trade Names (CD = combined drug)
Dexamethasone	Believed to inhibit several tissue mechanisms that induce inflammation (adrenocortical steriod [anti-inflammatory])	Symptomatic relief of inflammation (swelling, redness, heat, pain)
Decadron Dalalone	Hexadrol Neodecadron
Dextroamphetamine (d-Amphetamine)	Increases release of nerve impulse transmitter (central stimulant); this may also improve concentration and attention span of hyperactive child (primary calming action unknown); alters chemical control of nerve impulse transmission in appetite control center of brain (appetite suppressant [anorexiant])	Reduction or prevention of sleep epilepsy (narcolepsy); reduction of symptoms of abnormal hyperactivity (as in minimal brain dysfunction); suppression of appetite in management of weight reduction
Dexedrine	Biphetamine (CD)
Diazepam	Believed to reduce activity of some parts of limbic system (tranquilizer)	Relief of mild to moderate anxiety and tension without significant sedation
Valium
Dicyclomine	Believed to produce a local anesthetic action that blocks reflex activity responsible for spasm (antispasmodic)	Relief of discomfort from muscle spasm of the gastrointestinal tract
Bentyl
Digitoxin	Increases availability of calcium within the heart muscle, thus improving conversion of chemical energy to mechanical energy; slows pacemaker and delays transmission of electrical impulses (digitalis preparations [cardiotonic])	Improvement of heart muscle contraction force (as in congestive heart failure); correction of certain heart rhythm disorders
Crystodigin
Digoxin	Same as above	Same as above
Lanoxicaps Lanoxin
Diphenhydramine	Blocks action of histamine after release from sensitized tissue cells, thus reducing intensity of allergic response (antihistamine)	Relief of symptoms of hay fever (allergic rhinitis) and of allergic reactions of skin (itching, swelling, hives, rash)
Ambenyl (CD) Benadryl Benadryl DM (CD) Bromanyl (CD)	Dytuss (CD) Tylenol Cold Night Time (CD) Unisom Dual Relief (CD)
Doxylamine	Same as above	Same as above
Unisom	Cremacoat 4 (CD) Nyquil (CD)
Ephedrine	Blocks release of certain chemicals from sensitized tissue cells undergoing allergic reaction; relaxes bronchial muscles; shrinks tissue mass (decongestion) by contracting arteriole walls in lining of respiratory passages (adrenergic [bronchodilator])	Prevention and symptomatic relief of bronchial asthma; relief of congestion of respiratory passages
Primatene Mist Bronkolixir (CD) Bronkotabs (CD)	Medicone-Derma HC (CD) Nyquil (CD) Marax (CD) Primatene (CD) Mudrane (CD) Quadrinal (CD)	Quelidrine (CD) Rynatuss (CD) Tedral (CD)
Ergotamine	Constricts blood vessel walls, thus relieving excessive dilation that causes pain of vascular headaches (migraine analgesic [vasoconstrictor])	Prevention and early relief of vascular headaches such as migraines or histamine headaches
Ergomar Ergostat	Medihaler Ergotamine Cafergot (CD) Bellergal (CD)	Wigraine (CD)
Erythromycin	Prevents growth and multiplication of susceptible bacteria by interfering with formation of their essential proteins (antibiotic)	Elimination of infections responsive to action of this drug
A/T/S E.E.S. E-Mycin ERYC	EryDerm Erythrocin Erymax Ilosone EryPed Ilotycin Ery-Tab P.C.E.	Staticin/T-Stat Wyamycin S SK-Erythromycin Pediazole (CD)
Estrogens (Estrogenic Substances) Conjugated Estrogens, Esterified Estrogens (Estrone and Equilin) Estradiol Mestranol	Prepares uterus for pregnancy or induces menstruation by cyclic increase and decrease in tissue stimulation; when taken regularly, blood and tissue levels increase to resemble those during pregnancy, thus preventing pituitary gland from producing hormones that induce ovulation; reduces frequency and intensity of menopausal symptoms (female sex hormone)	Regulation of menstrual cycle; oral birth control; prevention of pregnancy; relief of symptoms of menopause
Estratab Premarin Estratest (CD)	Mediatric (CD) Brevicon (CD) Menrium (CD) Demulen (CD) PMB (CD) Enovid (CD)	Modicon (CD) Ortho-Novum (CD) Norethin (CD) Norinyl (CD)

Name	Action	Prescribed for
Trade Names (CD = combined drug)
Fluoxetine	Believed to inhibit nerve uptake of serotonin to reduce depression (antidepressant, sedative)	Relief from acute depression or major depressive episodes
Prozac
Griseofulvin	Believed to prevent growth and multiplication of susceptible fungus strains by interfering with their metabolic activities (antibiotic; antifungal)	Elimination of fungus infections responsive to actions of this drug
Fulvicin-U/F Fulvicin P/G Grifulvin V Grisactin Gris-PEG
Guaifenesin	Loosens phlegm and mucous from the bronchial passages by reducing viscosity and adhesiveness (expectorant)	Relief of painful coughs due to colds and influenzas; usually taken in conjunction with a decongestant
Codiclear (CD) Codimal (CD) Dilaudid (CD) Donatussin (CD) Guaifed (CD) Mudrane (CD) Naldecon (CD) Robitussin (CD) Quibron (CD) Triaminic (CD)
Hydralazine	Lowers pressure of blood in vessels by causing direct relaxation and expansion of vessel walls—mechanism unknown (antihypertensive)	Reduction of high blood pressure
Apresoline Apresazide (CD) Apresoline-Esidrex (CD) Ser-Ap-Es (CD) Serpasil-Apresoline (CD)
Hydrochlorothiazide	Increases elimination of salt and water (diuretic); relaxes walls of smaller arteries, allowing them to expand; combined effect lowers blood pressure (antihypertensive)	Elimination of excessive fluid retention (edema); reduction of high blood pressure
Esidrix HydroDIURIL Oretic Aldactazide (CD) Aldoril (CD) Apresazide (CD) Apresoline-Esidrix (CD) Dyazide (CD) Esimil (CD) Hydropres (CD) Inderide (CD) Maxzide (CD) Moduretic (CD) SK-Hydrochlorothiazide Timolide (CD)
Hydrocodone	Believed to affect opiate receptors in the nervous system, reducing pain and relaxing muscles (narcotic analgesic)	Relief of moderate to severe pain; severe cough and cold symptoms
Anexsia (CD) Azdone (CD) Bancap (CD) Codiclear (CD) Codimal (CD) Co-Gesic (CD) Donatussin (CD) DuoCet (CD) Entuss (CD) Hyco-Pap (CD) Hydrocet (CD) Lorcet (CD) Lortab (CD) Ru-Tuss with Hydrocodone (CD) Triaminic (CD)
Hydrocortisone (Cortisol)	Believed to inhibit several tissue mechanisms that induce inflammation (adrenocortical steroid [anti-inflammatory])	Symptomatic relief of inflammation (swelling, redness, heat, pain)
Aeroseb-HC Carmol HC Cortef Eldecort F-E-P Hydrocortone Hytone Penecort Synacort Vanoxide-HC Vioform-Hydrocortisone VōSoL HC Corticaine (CD) Cortisporin (CD) Derma-Sone (CD) Di-Hydrotic (CD) Hill Cortac (CD) Hysone (CD) Iodo-Cortifair (CD) Oticol (CD) Otocort (CD) Proctocort Proctocream (CD) Proctofoam (CD)
Hydroxyzine	Believed to reduce excessive activity in areas of brain that influence emotional health (antihistamine; tranquilizer)	Relief of anxiety, tension, apprehension, and agitation
Atarax Vistaril Marax (CD) SK-Hydroxyzine
Ibuprofen	Believed to inhibit prostaglandin sythetase production, acting as an anti-inflammatory agent; reduces fever (antipyretic), reduces inflammation and pain (antirheumatic, analgesic)	Relief of inflammation and pain from rheumatoid arthritis, osteoarthritis, and primary dysmenorrhea
Advil Children's Advil IBU-TAB Medipren Motrin Nuprin PediaProfen for children Rufen SK-Ibuprofen
Insulin (Human, beef, pork)	Facilitates passage of sugar through cell wall to interior of cell (hypoglycemic)	Control of diabetes
Humulin Iletin Insulatard NPH Lente Insulin Mixtard Novolin NPH Insulin Regular Insulin Semilente Insulin Ultrlente Insulin Velosulin
Isoniazid	Believed to interfere with several metabolic activities of susceptible tuberculosis organisms (antibacterial; tuberculostatic)	Prevention and treatment of tuberculosis
INH Laniazid Rifamate (CD)
Isopropamide	Prevents stimulation of muscular contraction and glandular secretion in organ involved (antispasmodic [anticholinergic])	Relief of discomfort from excessive activity and spasm of digestive tract
Darbid

Name	Action	Prescribed for
Trade Names (CD = combined drug)
Isoproterenol/ Isoprenaline	Dilates bronchial tubes by stimulating sympathetic nerve terminals (Isoproterenol: adrenergic [bronchodilator]; Isoprenaline: sympathomimetic)	Management of acute bronchial asthma, bronchitis, and emphysema
Isuprel Medihaler-Iso Norisodrine	Duo-Medihaler (CD) Isuprel Hydrochloride (CD)
Isosorbide Dinitrate	Acts directly on muscle cells to produce relaxation which permits expansion of blood vessels, thus increasing supply of blood and oxygen to heart (coronary vasodilator)	Management of pain associated with angina pectoris (coronary insufficiency)
Dilatrate Iso-Bid Isordil Sorbitrate
Levodopa	Believed to be converted to dopamine in brain tissue, thus correcting a dopamine deficiency and restoring more normal balance of chemicals responsible for transmission of nerve impulses (anti-Parkinsonism)	Management of Parkinson's disease
Larodopa Sinemet
Liothyronine (T-3)	Increases rate of cellular metabolism and makes more energy available for biochemical activity (thyroid hormone)	Correction of thyroid hormone deficiency (hypothyroidism)
Cytomel Euthroid (CD) Thyrolar (CD)
Lithium	Believed to correct chemical imbalance in certain nerve impulse transmitters that influence emotional behavior (antidepressant)	Improvement of mood and behavior in chronic manic-depression
Eskalith Cibalith-S Lithane Lithobid
Meclizine	Blocks transmission of excessive nerve impulses to vomiting center (antiemetic)	Management of nausea, vomiting, and dizziness associated with motion sickness
Antivert Bonine Meclizine HCl
Meperidine/Pethidine	Believed to increase chemicals that transmit nerve impulses (narcotic analgesic)	Relief of moderate to severe pain
Demerol Mepergan (CD)
Meprobamate	Not known (tranquilizer)	Relief of mild to moderate anxiety and tension (sedative effect); relief of insomnia resulting from anxiety and tension (hypnotic effect)
Equanil Miltown	Deprol (CD) Equagesic (CD) Meprospan PMB (CD)
Methadone	Believed to increase chemicals that transmit nerve impulses (narcotic analgesic)	Treatment of heroin addiction; sometimes for relief of moderate to severe pain
Dolophine Methadone Hydrochloride
Methyclothiazide	Increases elimination of salt and water (diuretic); relaxes walls of smaller arteries, allowing them to expand; combined effect lowers blood pressure (antihypertensive)	Elimination of excess fluid retention (edema); reduction of high blood pressure
Aquatensen	Enduron Diutensen (CD)	Enduronyl (CD)
Methylphenidate	Believed to increase release of nerve impulse transmitter, which may also improve concentration and attention span of hyperactive child (primary action unknown) (central stimulant)	Management of fatigue and depression; reduction of symptoms of abnormal hyperactivity (as in minimal brain dysfunction)
Ritalin
Nicotinic Acid/Niacin	Corrects a deficiency of nicotinic acid in tissues; dilation of blood vessels is believed limited to skin—increased blood flow within head has not been demonstrated; reduces initial production of cholesterol and prevents conversion of fatty tissue to cholesterol and triglycerides (vitamin B-complex component; cholesterol reducer)	Management of pellagra; treatment of vertigo, ringing in ears, premenstrual headache; reduction of blood levels of cholesterol and triglycerides
Niacor Nicobid Nicolar	Nicotinex Elixir Slo-Niacin

Name	Action	Prescribed for
Trade Names (CD = combined drug)
Nitrofurantoin	Believed to prevent growth and multiplication of susceptible bacteria by interfering with function of their essential enzyme systems (antibacterial)	Elimination of infections responsive to action of this drug
Furacin	Macrodantin
Nitroglycerin	Acts directly on muscle cells to produce relaxation which permits expansion of blood vessels, thus increasing supply of blood and oxygen to heart (coronary vasodilator)	Management of pain associated with angina pectoris (coronary insufficiency)
Nitro-Bid Nitrodisc Nitro-Dur Nitroglyn Nitrol	Nitrong Nitrostat Transderm-Nitro Tridil
Nystatin	Prevents gorwth and multiplication of susceptible fungus strains by attacking their walls and causing leakage of internal components (antibiotic; antifungal)	Elimination of fungus infections responsive to action of this drug
Mycostatin Nilstat Nystex	Mycolog (CD) Myco-Triacet (CD) Mytrex (CD)
Oral Contraceptives	Suppresses the two pituitary gland hormones that produce ovulation (oral contraceptives)	Prevention of pregnancy
Ovcon Brevicon Demulen Enovid-E	Loestrin LO/Ovral Micronor Medicon	Nordette Norinyl Norlestrin Ortho-Novum	Ovral Ovrette Ovulen Tri-Norinyl	Triphasil
Oxycodone	Believed to affect tissue sites that react specifically with opium and its derivatives (narcotic analgesic)	Relief of moderate pain; control of coughing
Percocet (CD) Percodan (CD) SK-Oxycodone with Acetaminophen (CD)	SK-Oxycodone with Aspirin (CD) Tylox (CD) Roxicet (CD)	Roxicodone Roxiprin (CD)
Oxytetracycline	Prevents growth and multiplication of susceptible bacteria by interfering with their formation of essential proteins (antibiotic)	Elimination of infections responsive to action of this drug
Terra-Cortril (CD)	Terramycin	Urobiotic (CD)
Papaverine	Causes direct relaxation and expansion of blood vessel walls, thus increasing volume of blood which increases oxygen and nutrients (smooth muscle relaxant; vasodilator)	Relief of symptoms associated with impaired circulation in extremities and within brain
SK-Papaverine Pavabid
Paregoric (Camphorated Tincture of Opium)	Believed to affect tissue sites that react specifically with opium and its derivatives to relieve pain; its active ingredient, morphine, acts as a local anesthetic and blocks release of chemical that transmits nerve impulses to muscle walls of intestine (antiperistaltic)	Relief of mild to moderate pain; relief of intestinal cramping and diarrhea
Donnagel-PG (CD) Parepectolin (CD)
Penicillin G	Interferes with ability of susceptible bacteria to produce new protective cell walls as they grow and multiply (antibiotic)	Elimination of infections responsive to action of this drug
Bicillin C-R Pentids Pfizerpen	SK-Pencillin G Wycillin
Penicillin V	Same as above	Same as above
Betapen-VK Pen-Vee K Ledercillin	SK-Pencillin VK Veetids
Pentobarbital	Believed to block transmission of nerve impulses (hypnotic; sedative)	Low dosage: relief of mild to moderate anxiety or tension (sedative effect); higher dosage: at bedtime to induce sleep (hypnotic effect)
Cafergot PB (CD) Nembutal
Phenazopyridine	Acts as local anesthetic on lining of lower urinary tract (urinary-analgesic)	Relief of pain and discomfort associated with acute irritation of lower urinary tract as in cystitis, urethritis, and prostatitis
Azo Gantanol (CD) Azo-Standard Pyridium	Thiosulfil-A (CD) Urobiotic (CD)

Name	Action	Prescribed for
Trade Names (CD = combined drug)
Pheniramine	Blocks action of histamine after release from sensitized tissue cells, thus reducing intensity of allergic response (antihistamine)	Relief of symptoms of hay fever (allergic rhinitis) and of allergic reactions of skin (itching, swelling, hives, and rash)
Triaminic Citra Forte (CD) Dristan (CD) Fiogesic (CD)	Poly-Histine-D (CD) Robitussin AC (CD) Ru-Tuss with Hydrocodone (CD) S-T Forte (CD) Triaminicin (CD) Tussagesic (CD)	Tussirex (CD)
Phenobarbital/ Phenobarbitone	Believed to block transmission of nerve impulses (anticonvulsant; hypnotic; sedative)	Low dosage: relief of mild to moderate anxiety or tension (sedative effect); higher dosage: at bedtime to induce sleep (hypnotic effect); continuous dosage: prevention of epileptic seizures (anticonvulsant effect)
SK-Phenobarbital Solfoton Antrocol (CD)	Bellergal-S (CD) Bronkolixir (CD) Bronkotabs (CD) Mudrane (CD) Mudrane GG (CD) Phazyme (CD)	Primatene (CD) Quadrinal (CD) T-E-P (CD)
Phentermine	Believed to alter chemical control of nerve impulse transmitter in appetite center of brain (appetite suppressant [anorexiant])	Suppression of appetite in management of weight reduction
Adipex-P Fastin Ionamin
Phenylbutazone	Believed to suppress formation of chemical involved in production of inflammation (analgesic; anti-inflammatory; antipyretic)	Symptomatic relief of inflammation, swelling, pain, and tenderness associated with arthritis, tendinitis, bursitis, superficial phlebitis
Butazolidin
Phenylephrine	Shrinks tissue mass (decongestion) by contracting arteriole walls in lining of nasal passages, sinuses, and throat, thus decreasing volume of blood (decongestant [sympathomimetic])	Relief of congestion of nose, sinuses, and throat associated with allergy
Codimal (CD) Comhist (CD) Cogespirin (CD) for children Coryban-D Cough Syrup (CD) Dallergy (CD) Dimetapp (CD) Donatussin (CD) Dristan, Advanced Formula (CD) Dura-Tap/PD (CD) Dura-Vent/PD (CD) Entex (CD) Extendryl (CD) 4-Way Nasal Spray (CD) Histor-D (CD) Hycomine (CD) Korigesic (CD) Naldecon (CD) Neo-Synephrine (CD) P-V-Tussin (CD) Pediacof (CD) Phenergan VC (CD) Protid (CD) Quelidrine (CD) Ru-Tuss (CD) Rynatan (CD) Rynatuss (CD)	Sinarest (CD) S-T Decongest (CD) S-T Forte (CD) Tamine S.R. (CD) Tavist-D (CD) Triaminic (CD) Triaminicin (CD) Triaminicol (CD) Tuss-Ade (CD) Tuss-Ornade (CD)
Phenytoin (formerly Diphenylhydantoin)	Believed to promote loss of sodium from nerve fibers, thus lowering their excitability and inhibiting spread of electrical impulse along nerve pathways (anticonvulsant)	Prevention of epileptic seizures
Dilantin
Pilocarpine	Lowers internal eye pressure (antiglaucoma [miotic])	Management of glaucoma
Almocarpine	Isopto Carpine Pilocar
Potassium	Maintains and replenishes potassium content of cells (potassium preparations)	Management of potassium deficiency
Kaon Kay Ciel	K-Lor Kaochlor Klorvess Pima Syrup
Prednisolone	Believed to inhibit several mechanisms that induce inflammation (adrenocortical steroid [anti-inflammatory])	Symptomatic relief of inflammation (swelling, redness, heat, and pain)
Delta-Cortef Hydeltra-T.B.A. Metimyd Metreton Predate

Name	Action	Prescribed for
Trade Names (CD = combined drug)

Quotations

The following pages contain more than 1600 significant sayings, epigrams, and thoughts of all ages, including our own. The quotations are grouped under 178 subject headings—from Ability to Youth—and following each is the author's name, his birth and death dates, and, in most cases, the source from which the quotation was obtained.

Most of the selections come from familiar sources—Shakespeare, Emerson, Bacon, Cervantes, Cicero, La Rochefoucauld, Aristotle, Thomas Jefferson, the Old and New Testaments, etc. Many additional selections, however, have been made from the ranks of contemporary thinkers, world leaders, and authors. Among those quoted are Lyndon B. Johnson, John F. Kennedy, Pope John XXIII, Winston Churchill, Arthur Miller, Eleanor Roosevelt, Jacques Maritain, and Edith Hamilton.

Ability

Natural abilities are like natural plants, that need pruning by study.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Essays: Of Studies

I add this also, that natural ability without education has oftener raised man to glory and virtue than education without natural ability.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) Oratio Pro Licinio Archia

Skill to do comes of doing.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Society and Solitude

A man who qualifies himself well for his calling, never fails of employment.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826)

It is a great ability to be able to conceal one's ability.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

Better be proficient in one art than a smatterer in a hundred.
—Japanese proverb

So long as a man imagines that he cannot do this or that, so long is he determined not to do it; and consequently so long is it impossible to him that he should do it.
—Benedict Spinoza (1632–1677) Ethics

They are able because they think they are able.
—Vergil (70–19 B.C.) Aeneid

Absence

But ay the tear comes in me ee,
To think on him that's far awa.
—Robert Burns (1759–1796) The Bonnie Lad That's Far Awa

Our hours in love have wings; in absence crutches.
—Colley Cibber (1671–1757) Xerxes

To him that absent is All things succeed amiss
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

Friends, though absent, are still present.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Amicitia

Absence from whom we love is worse than death
And frustrate hope severer than despair
—William Cowper (1731–1800) Despair at his Separation

Love reckons hours for months, and days for years;
And every little absence is an age.
—John Dryden (1631–1700) Amphitryon

Out of sight, out of mind
—Homer (c. 10th–8th C. B.C.) Odyssey

Friendship, like love, is destroyed by long absence, though it may be increased by short intermissions.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) The Idler

But O the heavy change, now thou art gone,
Now thou art gone, and never must return!
—John Milton (1608–1674) Lycidas

Two evils, monstrous either one apart
Possessed me, and were long and loath at going:
A cry of Absence, Absence, in the heart,
And in the wood the furious winter blowing.
—John Crowe Ransom (1888–1974) Winter Remembered

Hast thou no care of me? shall I abide In this dull world, which in thy absence is No better than a sty?
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Antony and Cleopatra, IV, xiii, 60

The Lord watch between me and thee, when we are absent from one another.
—Old Testament: Genesis, xxxi, 49

Greater things are believed of those who are absent.
—Tacitus (c. 55–117) Histories

Action

I am perplexed . . . whether to act or not to act.
—Aeschylus (525–456 B.C.) Suppliant Maidens

Of every noble action the intent
Is to give worth reward, vice punishment.
—Francis Beaumont (1584–1616) and John Fletcher (1579–1625) The Captain

The end of man is an action, not a thought.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) Sartor Resartus

Action may not always bring happiness; but there is no happiness without action.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881) Lothair

A man's action is only a picture book of his creed.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882)

Brave actions never want a Trumpet.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) Gnomologia

The great end of life is not knowledge, but action.
—T. H. Huxley (1825–1895) Technical Education

We would often be ashamed of our finest actions if the world understood all the motives which produced them.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

Actions speak louder than words.
—Proverb

One hour of life, crowded to the full with glorious action, and filled with noble risks, is worth whole years of those mean observances of paltry decorum.
—Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832) Count Robert of Paris

If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere well
It were done quickly.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Macbeth, I, vii, i

Heaven n'er helps the men who will not act.
—Sophocles (495–406 B.C.) Fragment

No sooner said than done.
—Terence (c. 190–150 B.C.) Eunuchus

We cannot think first and act afterwards. From the moment of birth we are immersed in action, and can only fitfully guide it by taking thought.
—Alfred North Whitehead (1861–1947)

Adversity

The virtue of prosperity is temperance; the virtue of adversity is fortitude. . . .
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Essays

Hope and patience are two sovereign remedies for all, the surest reposals, the softest cushions to lean on in adversity.
—Robert Burton (1577–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

Adversity is sometimes hard upon a man; but for one man who can stand prosperity there are a hundred that will stand adversity.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) Heroes and Hero-Worship

Friendship, of itself a holy tie,
Is made more sacred by adversity.
—John Dryden (1631–1700) The Hind and the Panther

In time of prosperity friends will be plenty;
In time of adversity not one in twenty.
—James Howell (1594?–1666) Proverbs

Mishaps are like knives, that either serve us or cut us, as we grasp them by the blade or the handle.
—Herman Melville (1819–1891) Cambridge Thirty Years Ago

In adversity a man is saved by hope.
—Menander (342–291 B.C.) Fragments

It is a kingly action, believe me, to come to the help of those who are fallen.
—Ovid (43 B.C.–A.D. 18?) Epistulae ex Ponto

Great men rejoice in adversity just as brave soldiers triumph in war.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) De Providentia

Trial is the true test of mortal men.
—Pindar (c. 522–442 B.C.) Olympian Odes

Of one ill comes many.
—Scottish proverb

Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, II, i, 12

The worst is not So long as we can say, "This is the worst."
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) King Lear, IV, i, 28

It is the duty of all persons, when affairs are the most prosperous, then in especial to reflect within themselves in what way they are to endure adversity.
—Terence (c. 190–150 B.C.) Phormio

In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider.
—Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, viii

A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xvii, 17

Advice

A fool sometimes gives weighty advice.
—Nicholas Boileau (1636–1711)

Who cannot give good counsel? 'Tis cheap, it costs them nothing.
—Robert Burton (1577–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

A woman's advice is not worth much, but he who doesn't heed it is a fool.
—Pedro Calderón (1600–1681) El medico de su honra

No one can give you better advice than yourself.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) Ad Atticum

We ask advice, but we mean approbation.
—Charles C. Colton (1780?–1832) Lacon

When Thales was asked what was difficult, he said, "To know one's self." And what was easy, "To advise another."
—Diogenes Laertius (2nd or 3rd C.)

'Tis easier to advise the suffering than to bear suffering.
—Euripides (480–406 B.C.) Alcestis

Don't give your advice before you are called upon.
—Desiderius Erasmus (1466–1536) Adagia

Whatever advice you give, be short.
—Horace (B.C. 65–8) Ars Poetica

Advice is offensive, —because it shows us that we are known to others as well as to ourselves.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) The Rambler

Advice is least heeded when most needed.
—English proverb

Never advise anyone to go to war or to marry.
—Spanish proverb

Many receive advice, only the wise profit by it.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. B.C.)

The only thing to do with good advice is to pass it on. It is never of any use to oneself.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) An Ideal Husband

Age

Age appears to be the best in four things—old wood best to burn, old wine to drink, old friends to trust, and old authors to read.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Apothegms, No. 97

He lives long that lives till all are weary of him.
—Henry George Bohn (1797–1884) Handbook of Proverbs

Grow old along with me!
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which the first was made.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Rabbi Ben Ezra

Let age approve of youth, and death complete the same.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Rabbi Ben Ezra

Young men think old men are fools; but old men know young men are fools.
—George Chapman (1559?–1634?) All Fools, Act V

I am ready to meet my Maker. Whether my Maker is prepared for the great ordeal of meeting me is another matter.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) remark on eve of his 75th birthday

For as I like a young man in whom there is something of the old, so I like an old man in whom there is something of the young.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) De Senectute

No one is so old as to think he cannot live one more year.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) De Senectute

A man is as old as he's feeling
A woman as old as she looks.
—Mortimer Collins (1827–1876) How Old Are You?

Folly in youth is sin, in age is madness.
—Samuel Daniel (1562–1619)

Age is like love; it cannot be hid.
—Thomas Dekker (1570?–1632) Old Fortunatus, Act II

Youth is a blunder; Manhood a struggle; Old Age a regret.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881) Coningsby

A woman is as old as she looks to a man that likes to look at her.
—Finley Peter Dunne (1867–1936) Old Age

We do not count a man's years until he has nothing else to count.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882)

Forty is the old age of youth; fifty is the youth of old age.
—Victor Hugo (1802–1885)

Whenever a man's friends begin to compliment him about looking young, he may be sure that they think he is growing old.
—Washington Irving (1783–1859)

It was near a miracle to see an old man silent, since talking is the disease of age.
—Ben Jonson (1572–1637)

We hope to grow old, and we fear old age: that is to say, we love life and flee death.
—Jean de la Bruyère (1645–1696) Caractères

Of middle age the best that can be said is that a middle-aged person has likely learned how to have a little fun in spite of his troubles.
—Don Marquis (1878–1932) The Almost Perfect State

He who is of a calm and happy nature will hardly feel the pressure of Age, but to him who is of an opposite disposition, youth and age are equally a burden.
—Plato (428–347 b.c.) The Republic

He whom the gods favour dies in youth.
—Plautus (c. 254–184 b.c.) Bacchides

When men grow virtuous in old age, they only make a sacrifice to God of the devil's leavings.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Thoughts on Various Subjects

To the old cat give a tender mouse.
—Italian proverb

Before old age my care was to live well; in old age, to die well.
—Seneca (4? b.c.–a.d. 65)

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Antony and Cleopatra, II, ii, 243

No wise man ever wished to be younger.
—Jonathan Swift (1667–1745)

To love is natural in a young man, a shame in an old one.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. b.c.)

Nobody loves life like an old man.
—Sophocles (495–406 b.c.) Acrisius, Frag. 63

In the days of my youth I remembered my God,
And He hath not forgotten my age.
—Robert Southey (1774–1843) The Old Man's Comforts

We are always the same age inside.
—Gertrude Stein (1874–1946)

A fool at forty is a fool indeed.
—Edward Young (1683–1765) Love of Fame

Ambition

Every eel hopes to become a whale.
—German proverb

The same ambition can destroy or save,
And makes a patriot as it makes a knave.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Man

All ambitions are lawful except those which climb upward on the miseries or credulities of mankind.
—Joseph Conrad (1857–1924) Personal Record

'Tis a laudable Ambition, that aims at being better than his Neighbours.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

A man without ambition is like a woman without beauty.
—Frank Harris (1856–1931) Montes the Matador

Ambition is a vice, but it may be the father of virtue.
—Quintilian (40–c. 100)

The slave has but one master; the man of ambition has as many as there are people useful to his fortune.
—Jean de la Bruyère (1645–1696) Caractères

Ambition and suspicion always go together.
—Georg Christoph Lichtenberg (1742–1799)

The very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616), Hamlet, II, ii, 268

America

Driven from every other corner of the earth, freedom of thought and the right of private judgment in matters of conscience direct their course to this happy country as their last asylum.
—Samuel Adams (1722–1803) Speech at Philadelphia, 1776

The South! the South! God knows what will become of her.
—John C. Calhoun (1782–1850) on his deathbed.

Our country! in her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong!
—Stephen Decatur (1779–1820) Toast at a dinner, 1816

I feel that you are justified in looking into the future with true assurance, because you have a mode of living in which we find the joy of life and the joy of work harmoniously combined. Added to this is the spirit of ambition which pervades your very being, and seems to make the day's work like a happy child at play.
—Albert Einstein (1879–1955) New Year's Greeting, 1931

America means opportunity, freedom, power.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Essays, Second Series

We must meet our duty and convince the world that we are just friends and brave enemies.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826)

The citizens of America have explored the sea and air. They have given open-handed hospitality and employment to people immigrating from every land. America has continued to overcome with courage the various difficulties that have arisen from time to time and to render her legislation ever more in keeping with the dignity of the human person.
—Pope John XXIII (1881–1963), March 17, 1963

If we are to keep our system secure and our society stable, we must all begin to work where all of us work best—and that is in the communities where we all live.
—Lyndon B. Johnson (1908–1973) Speech, August, 1964

I am willing to love all mankind, except an American.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) in Boswell's Life

And so, my fellow Americans: Ask not what your country can do for you—ask what you can do for your country.
—John F. Kennedy (1917–1963) Inauguration Speech, 1961

A citizen, first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.
—General Henry "Light-Horse Harry" Lee (1756–1818)

Intellectually I know that America is no better than any other country; emotionally I know she is better than every other country.
—Sinclair Lewis (1885–1951) Interview in Berlin, 1930

In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparation for our defence.
—James Monroe (1758–1831) Message to Congress, 1823

The United States never lost a war or won a conference.
—Will Rogers (1879–1935)

There is a homely adage which runs, "Speak softly and carry a big stick; you will go far." If the American nation will speak softly and yet build and keep at a pitch of the highest training the Monroe Doctrine will go far.
—Theodore Roosevelt (1858–1919)

Every American takes pride in our tradition of hospitality, to men of all races and all creeds. We must be constantly vigilant against the attacks of intolerance and injustice. We must scrupulously guard the civil rights and civil liberties of all citizens, whatever their background.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945)

Yesterday, December 7, 1941—a date that will live in infamy—the United States of America was suddenly and deliberately attacked by naval and air forces of the Empire of Japan.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt, 1941

In the four quarters of the globe, who reads an American book? or goes to an American play? or looks at an American picture or statue? What does the world yet owe to American physicians or surgeons? . . . What have they done in mathematics? Who drinks out of American glasses? . . . or wears American coats and gowns? . . . Finally, under which of the old tyrannical governments of Europe is every sixth man a slave . . . ?
—Sidney Smith (1771–1845) in the Edinburgh Review, 1820

Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable!
—Daniel Webster (1782–1852) Speech, 1830

The Americans, like the English, probably make love worse than any other race.
—Walt Whitman (1819–1892) An American Primer

Our whole duty, for the present at any rate, is summed up in the motto: America first.
—Woodrow Wilson (1856–1924) Speech, 1915

America is God's crucible, the great Melting-Pot where all the races of Europe are melting and re-forming.
—Israel Zangwill (1864–1926) The Melting-Pot

Anger

I was angry with my friend:
I told my wrath, my wrath did end.
I was angry with my foe;
I told it not, my wrath did grow.
—William Blake (1757–1827) Christian Forbearance

Anger begins with folly and ends with repentance.
—Henry George Bohn (1796–1884) Handbook of Proverbs

Truly to moderate your mind and speech when you are angry, or else to hold your peace, betokens no ordinary nature.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) Epistolae Quintum Fratrem

Beware the fury of a patient man.
—John Dryden (1631–1700) Absalom and Achitophel

Anger and folly walk cheek by jowl; repentance treads on both their heels.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

Two things a man should never be angry at: what he can help, and what he cannot help.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) Historie of the Holy Warre

Temper: a quality that, at critical moments, brings out the best in steel and the worst in people.
—Oscar Hammling (1890–) Laconics

Let anger's fire be slow to burn.
—George Herbert (1593–1633) Jacula Prudentum

When I am angry I can write, pray, and preach well, for then my whole temperament is quickened, my understanding sharpened, and all mundane vexations and temptations depart.
—Martin Luther (1483–1546) Table-Talk

The best answer to anger is silence.
—German proverb

A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xv, i

Art

It is the glory and good of Art,
That Art remains the one way possible
Of speaking truth. . . .
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) The Ring and the Book

Art imitates nature as well as it can, as a pupil follows his master; thus is it a sort of grandchild of God.
—Dante (1265–1321) Inferno, Canto xi

In life beauty perishes, but not in art.
—Leonardo da Vinci (1452–1519) Notebook

Great art is the contempt of a great man for small art.
—F. Scott Fitzgerald (1896–1940) Notebooks

Nobody, I think, ought to read poetry, or look at pictures or statues, who cannot find a great deal more in them than the poet or artist has actually expressed.
—Nathaniel Hawthorne (1804–1864) The Marble Faun

Rules and models destroy genius and art.
—William Hazlitt (1778–1830) On Taste

Life is short, the art long, opportunity fleeting, experience treacherous, judgment difficult.
—Hippocrates (460?–377? b.c.) Aphorisms

Art may make a suit of clothes; but Nature must produce a man.
—David Hume (1711–1776) Essays: The Epicurean, 15

Art is nothing more than the shadow of humanity.
—Henry James (1843–1916) Lectures

Art hath an enemy called ignorance.
—Ben Jonson (1574–1637)

The true work of art is but a shadow of the divine perfection.
—Michelangelo (1475–1564)

To have faithfully studied the honorable arts, softens the manners and keeps them free from harshness.
—Ovid (43 b.c.–a.d. 18?) Epistles

There are three arts which are concerned with all things: one which uses, another which makes, and a third which imitates them.
—Plato (428–347 b.c.) The Republic

True artists are almost the only men who do their work with pleasure.
—Auguste Rodin (1840–1917)

When love and skill work together expect a masterpiece.
—John Ruskin (1819–1900)

Art is not a handicraft; it is the transmission of feeling the artist has experienced.
—Leo Tolstoy (1828–1910) What is Art?

A work of art is a corner of creation seen through a temperament.
—Émile Zola (1840–1902) Mes Haines

An artist may visit a museum, but only a pedant can live there.
—George Santayana (1853–1952) Life of Reason

Autumn

Autumn wins you best by this, its mute Appeal to sympathy for its decay.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Paracelsus

All-cheering Plenty, with her flowing horn, Led yellow Autumn, wreath'd with nodding corn.
—Robert Burns (1759–1796) The Brigs of Ayr

The melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year,
Of wailing winds, and naked woods, and meadows brown and sear.
—William Cullen Bryant (1794–1878) The Death of the Flowers

She loves the bare, the withered tree;
She walks the sodden pasture lane.
—Robert Frost (1875–1963) My November Guest

Dread autumn, harvest-season of the Goddess of Death.
—Horace (65–8 b.c.) Satires

A solemn land of long-fulfilled desires
Is this, and year by year the self-same fires Burn in the trees.
—Mary Webb (1881–1927) The Plain in Autumn

Avarice

Be not penny-wise; riches have wings, and sometimes they fly away of themselves, sometimes they must be set flying to bring in more.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Essays: Of Riches

If you would abolish avarice, you must abolish its mother, luxury.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) De Oratore

Would'st thou both eat thy cake and have it?
—George Herbert (1593–1633) The Size

It is sheer madness to live in want in order to be wealthy when you die.
—Juvenal (c. 60–c. 130) Satires

The beautiful eyes of my money-box!
He speaks of it as a lover of his mistress.
—Molière (1622–1673) L'Avare

They are greedy dogs which can never have enough.
—Old Testament: Isaiah, lvi, 11

Beauty

Beauty is a gift of God.
—Aristotle (384–322 b.c.) Apothegm

There is no excellent beauty that hath not some strangeness in the proportion.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Essays: Of Beauty

Beauty is not caused. It is.
—Emily Dickinson (1830–1886) Further Poems

No Spring, nor Summer beauty hath such grace,
As I have seen in one Autumnal face.
—John Donne (1572–1631) Elegies

Beauty is in the eye of the beholder.
—Margaret W. Hungerford (1855?–1897)

A thing of beauty is a joy forever;
Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness. . . .
—John Keats (1795–1821) Endymion

"Beauty is truth, truth beauty," that is all Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know.
—John Keats (1795–1821) Ode on a Grecian Urn

Euclid alone
Has looked on Beauty bare.
—Edna St. Vincent Millay (1892–1951) Sonnets

Beauty and wisdom are seldom found together.
—Petronius Arbiter (1st C. a.d.) Satyricon

It is the beautiful bird that gets caged.
—Chinese proverb

Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, I, iii, 13

O how can beautie maister the most strong!
—Edmund Spenser (1552?–1599) Faerie Queene

Children

It is a great happiness to see our children rising round us, but from that good fortune spring the bitterest woes of man.
—Aeschylus (525–456 b.c.) Agamemnon

Cornelia kept her in talk till her children came from school, "And these," said she, "are my jewels."
—Robert Burton (1557–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

Respect the child. Be not too much his parent.
Trespass not on his solitude.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882)

To a father waxing old nothing is dearer than a daughter. Sons have spirits of higher pitch, but less inclined to sweet, endearing fondness.
—Euripides (480–406 b.c.)

An undutiful Daughter will prove an unmanageable Wife.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

It is a wise child that knows his own father.
—Homer (10th–8th C. b.c.) Odyssey

Children have more need of models than of critics.
—Joseph Joubert (1754–1824) Pensées, No. 261

Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the children's hour.
—Henry W. Longfellow (1807–1882) The Children's Hour

Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for such is the kingdom of God.
—New Testament: Mark, x, 14; Luke, xviii, 16

It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones.
—New Testament: Luke, xvii, 2

Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength.
—Old Testament: Psalms, viii, 2

The wildest colts make the best horses.
—Plutarch (46–120)

A wise son maketh a glad father.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, x, 1

Even a child is known by his doings.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xx, 11

Behold the child, by nature's kindly law, Pleased with a rattle, tickled with a straw.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Man

Lacking all sense of right and wrong, a child can do nothing which is morally evil, or which merits either punishment or reproof.
—Jean-Jacques Rousseau (1712–1778) Emile

At first the infant,
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms.
And then the whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, II, viii, 143

I do not love him because he is good, but because he is my little child.
—Sir Rabindranath Tagore (1861–1941) The Crescent Moon

A child tells in the street what its father and mother say at home.
—The Talmud

A babe in a house is a well-spring of pleasure.
—Martin Farquhar Tupper (1810–1889) Of Education

Heaven lies about us in our infancy.
—William Wordsworth (1770–1850) Intimations of Immortality

The child is father of the man.
—William Wordsworth (1770–1850) My Heart Leaps up When I Behold

Civilization

Civilization degrades the many to exalt the few.
—Bronson Alcott (1799–1888) Table-Talk

Increased means and increased leisure are the two civilizers of man.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881) Speech, 1872

The true test of civilization is not the census, nor the size of cities, nor the crops, —no, but the kind of man the country turns out.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Essays: Society and Solitude.

No one is so savage that he cannot become civilized, if he will lend a patient ear to culture.
—Horace (65–8 b.c.) Epistles

Things have their day, and their beauties in that day. It would be preposterous to expect any one civilization to last forever.
—George Santayana (1863–1952) Character and Opinion in the United States

A civilization which develops only on its material side, and not in corresponding measure on its mental and spiritual side, is like a vessel with a defective steering gear. . . .
—Albert Schweitzer (1875–1965) The Decay and Restoration of Civilization

Common Sense

If a man can have only one kind of sense, let him have common sense. If he has that and uncommon sense too, he is not far from genius.
—Henry Ward Beecher (1813–1887)

Nothing astonishes men so much as common sense and plain dealing.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Art

Where sense is wanting, everything is wanting.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

Common sense is only a modification of talent. Genius is an exaltation of it.
—Edward Bulwer-Lytton (1803–1873)

Common sense is not so common.
—Voltaire (1694–1778) Philosophical Dictionary

Compensation

For every thing you have missed, you have gained something else; and for every thing you gain, you lose something.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Compensation

For all our works a recompense is sure:
'Tis sweet to think on what was hard t'endure.
—Robert Herrick (1591–1674) Hesperides

It is a comfort that the medal has two sides. There is much vice and misery in the world, I know; but more virtue and happiness, I believe.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826)

Whoever tries for great objects must suffer something.
—Plutarch (46?–120?) Lives

There is no evil without its compensation. Avarice promises money; luxury, pleasure; ambition, a purple robe.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) Epistulae ad Lucillium

Give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.
—Old Testament: Isaiah, lxi, 3

Conceit See egotism

Conscience

Conscience and reputation are two things. Conscience is due to yourself, reputation to your neighbor.
—St. Augustine (354–430)

There is another man within me that's angry with me.
—Sir Thomas Browne (1605–1682) Religio Medici

Conscience, good my lord,
Is but the pulse of reason.
—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834) Zapolya

The still small voice.
—William Cowper (1731–1800) The Task

A good conscience is a continual Christmas.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

The man who acts never has any conscience; no one has any conscience but the man who thinks.
—Goethe (1749–1832)

That fierce thing
They call a conscience.
—Thomas Hood (1799–1845) Lamia

The sting of conscience, like the gnawing of a dog at a bone, is mere foolishness.
—Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900) Human All-too-Human

There is no witness so terrible, no accuser so potent, as the conscience that dwells in every man's breast.
—Polybius (c. 204–122 B.C.) Histories

The worm of conscience keeps the same hours as the owl.
—Schiller (1759–1805) Kabale und Liebe

The play's the thing
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, II, ii, 641

Trust that man in nothing who has not a conscience in everything.
—Laurence Sterne (1713–1768) Tristram Shandy

Conscience is, in most men, an anticipation of the opinion of others.
—Sir Henry Taylor (1800–1886) The Statesman

Conscience and cowardice are really the same thing.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) The Picture of Dorian Gray

Conservatism

The absurd man is one who never changes.
—Auguste Barthelemy (1796–1867) Nemesis

Conservative: A statesman who is enamored of existing evils, as distinguished from the Liberal who wishes to replace them with others.
—Ambrose Bierce (1842–1914?) The Devil's Dictionary

A conservative government is an organized hypocrisy.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881)

A conservative is a man who is too cowardly to fight and too fat to run.
—Elbert Hubbard (1856–1915) Epigrams

What is conservatism? Is it not adherence to the old and tried, against the new and untried?
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865) Cooper Union Address, 1860

Be not the first by whom the new are tried,
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Criticism

The man for whom the law exists—the man of forms, the Conservative, is a tame man.
—Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862) An Essay on Civil Disobedience

Constancy and Inconstancy

Without constancy there is neither love, friendship, nor virtue in the world.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719)

It is as absurd to say that a man can't love one woman all the time as it is to say that a violinist needs several violins to play the same piece of music.
—Honoré de Balzac (1799–1850) Physiology of Marriage

A good man it is not mine to see. Could I see a man possessed of constancy, that would satisfy me.
—Confucius (c. 551–478 B.C.) Analects

What is there in this vile earth that more commendeth a woman than constancy?
—John Lyly (1554?–1606) Euphues

There are two sorts of constancy in love—one rises from continually discovering in the loved person new subjects for love, the other arises from our making a merit of being constant.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

But I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true-fix'd and resting quality
There is no fellow in the firmament.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Julius Caesar, III, i, 58

There is nothing in this world constant but inconstancy.
—Jonathan Swift (1667–1745)

Contempt

Familiarity breeds contempt, while rarity wins admiration.
—Apuleius (2nd C.) De Deo Socratis

None but the contemptible are apprehensive of contempt.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

Here is another man with whom I cannot get angry, because I despise him.
—Benito Mussolini (1883–1945)

Man is much more sensitive to the contempt of others than to self-contempt.
—Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900) Human All-too-Human

Contempt penetrates even the shell of the tortoise.
—Persian proverb

Content and Discontent

No form of society can be reasonably stable in which the majority of the people are not fairly content. People cannot be content if they feel that the foundations of their lives are wholly unstable.
—James Truslow Adams (1878–1949) Record of America

Be content with your lot; one cannot be first in everything.
—Aesop (6th C. B.C.) The Peacock and Juno

A perverse and fretful disposition makes any state of life unhappy.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Senectute

Who is rich? He that is content. Who is that? Nobody.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

Unhappy man! He frets at the narrow limits of the world.
—Juvenal (c. 60–c. 130 A.D.)

When we cannot find contentment in ourselves it is useless to seek it elsewhere.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

Discontent is the first step in the progress of a man or nation.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) A Woman of No Importance

Poor in abundance, famish'd at a feast.
—Edward Young (1683–1765) Night Thoughts

I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content.
—New Testament: Hebrews, iv, 11

Courage

Often the test of courage is not to die but to live.
—Vittorio Alfieri (1749–1803) Oreste

But where life is more terrible than death, it is then the truest valor to dare to live.
—Sir Thomas Browne (1663–1704) Religio Medici

Courage is that virtue which champions the cause of right.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Officiis

Every man of courage is a man of his word.
—Pierre Corneille (1606–1684) Le Menteur

Courage consists in equality to the problem before us.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Society and Solitude

Courage may be taught as a child is taught to speak.
—Euripides (480–406 B.C.) The Suppliant Women

A decent boldness ever meets with friends.
—Homer (c. 10th C.–8th C. B.C.) Iliad

Nothing is too high for the daring of mortals; we storm Heaven itself in our folly.
—Horace (65–8 B.C.) Odes

It is better to die on your feet than to live on your knees.
—La Pasionaria (1895–) Speech at Paris, 1936

True courage is to do, without witnesses, everything that one is capable of doing before all the world.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

What though the field be lost?
All is not lost; th'unconquerable will,
And study of revenge, immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield.
—John Milton (1608–1674) Paradise Lost

The strongest, most generous, and proudest of all virtues is true courage.
—Michel de Montaigne (1533–1592) Essays

Be of good cheer: it is I; be not afraid.
—New Testament: Matthew, xiv, 27

We shall attack and attack until we are exhausted, and then we shall attack again.
—General George S. Patton (1885–1945) Address to his troops before the invasion of North Africa, 1942

The smallest worm will turn being trodden on,
And doves will peck in safeguard of their brood.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) III Henry VI, II, ii, 17

Why, courage then! What cannot be avoided
'Twere childish weakness to lament or fear.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Henry VI, V, iv, 37

Courtship

Those marriages generally abound most with love and constancy that are preceded by a long courtship.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719) The Spectator

He that will win his dame must do
As love does when he draws his bow;
With one hand thrust the lady from,
And with the other pull her home.
—Samuel Butler (1612–1680) Hudibras

Courtship to marriage is but as the music in the playhouse till the curtain's drawn.
—William Congreve (1670–1729) The Old Bachelor

If I am not worth the wooing, I am surely not worth the winning.
—Henry W. Longfellow (1807–1882) Courtship of Miles Standish

Had we but world enough and time
This coyness, lady, were no crime.
—Andrew Marvell (1621–1678) To His Coy Mistress

I will now court her in the conqueror's style;
"Come, see, and overcome."
—Philip Massinger (1583–1640) Maid of Honor

We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We should be woo'd and were not made to woo.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Midsummer Night's Dream, II, i, 241

The weather is usually fine when people are courting.
—R. L. Stevenson (1850–1894) Virginibus Puerisque

A man always chases a woman until she catches him.
—Unknown

Courtesy

If a man be gracious and courteous to strangers it shows he is a citizen of the world.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Essays

Politeness. The most acceptable hypocrisy.
—Ambrose Bierce (1842–1914?) Devil's Dictionary

'Tis ill talking of halters in the house of a man that was hanged.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote, Pt. i

Politeness is the ritual of society, as prayers are of the church.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) English Traits

Be civil to all; sociable to many; familiar with few.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

He was so generally civil, that nobody thanked him for it.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) in Boswell's Life

Civility is a desire to receive it in turn, and to be accounted well bred.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

Politeness costs nothing and gains everything.
—Lady Mary Wortley Montagu (1689–1762) Letters

It is one of the greatest blessings that so many women are so full of tact. The calamity happens when a woman who has all the other riches of life just lacks that one thing.
—Sir William Osler (1848–1919)

True politeness consists in being easy one's self, and in making every one about one as easy as one can.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Table-Talk

To speak kindly does not hurt the tongue.
—French proverb

Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant Can tickle where she wounds!
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Cymbeline, I, i, 84

The greater man the greater courtesy.
—Tennyson (1809–1882) The Last Tournament

Cowardice

Coward. One who in a perilous emergency thinks with his legs.
—Ambrose Bierce (1842–1914?) Devil's Dictionary

To see what is right and not do it is want of courage.
—Confucius (551–478 b.c.) Analects

The coward never on himself relies,
But to an equal for assistance flies.
—George Crabbe (1754–1832) The Gentleman Farmer

Many would be cowards if they had courage enough.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) Gnomologia

Ever will a coward show no mercy.
—Sir Thomas Malory (f. 1470) Morte d'Arthur

It is the act of a coward to wish for death.
—Ovid (43 b.c.–a.d. 18?) Metamorphoses

The coward calls himself cautious.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. b.c.) Sententiae

A cowardly cur barks more fiercely than it bites.
—Quintus Curtius Rufus (c. 2nd C. a.d.) De Rebus Gestis Alexandri Magni

When all the blandishments of life are gone,
The coward sneaks to death, the brave live on.
—George Sewell (d. 1726)

A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Twelfth Night, III, iv, 427

Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant never taste of death but once.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Julius Caesar, II, ii, 32

Criticism

Criticism is a disinterested endeavour to learn and propagate the best that is known and thought in the world.
—Matthew Arnold (1822–1888) Essays in Criticism

As the arts advance towards their perfection, the science of criticism advances with equal pace.
—Edmund Burke (1729–1797) On the Sublime and Beautiful

Let dull critics feed upon the carcasses of plays; give me the taste and the dressing.
—Lord Chesterfield (1694–1773) Letters to his Son

Critics—murderers!
—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834)

Those who write ill, and they who ne'er durst write,
Turn critics out of mere revenge and spite.
—John Dryden (1631–1700) Conquest of Granada

Blame where you must, be candid where you can,
And be each critic the Good-natured Man.
—Oliver Goldsmith (1728–1774) Good-Natured Man

Criticism is the art wherewith a critic tries to guess himself into a share of the artist's fame.
—George Jean Nathan (1882–1958) House of Satan

Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer
And without sneering teach the rest to sneer.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot

They damn what they do not understand.
—Quintilian (c. 40–100 a.d.) De Institutione Oratoria

Critic: a man who writes about things he doesn't like.
—Unknown

Really to stop criticism they say one must die.
—Voltaire (1694–1778)

Curiosity

This disease of curiosity.
—St. Augustine (354–430) Confessions

The first and simplest emotion which we discover in the human mind is curiosity.
—Edmund Burke (1729–1797) The Sublime and Beautiful

Shun the inquisitive person, for he is also a talker.
—Horace (65–8 b.c.) Epistles

Curiosity is one of the most permanent and certain characteristics of a vigorous intellect.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) The Rambler

Curiosity killed the cat.
—American proverb

He that pryeth into every cloud may be struck by a thunderbolt.
—John Ray (1627?–1705) English Proverbs

You know what a woman's curiosity is. Almost as great as a man's!
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) An Ideal Husband

Curiosity. The reason why most of us haven't committed suicide long ago.
—Unknown

Danger

Dangers bring fears, and fears more dangers bring.
—Richard Baxter (1615–1691) Love Breathing Thanks

Danger, the spur of all great minds.
—George Chapman (1559?–1634?) Bussy d'Ambois

Moving of the earth brings harms and fears.
Men reckon what it did and meant.
But trepidation of the spheres
Though greater far, is innocent.
—John Donne (1573–1631) Valediction Forbidding Mourning

As soon as there is life there is danger.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Lectures

Great perils have this beauty, that they bring to light the fraternity of strangers.
—Victor Hugo (1802–1885) Les Misérables

Out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) I Henry IV, II, iii, 10

Better face a danger once than be always in fear.
—Proverb

Darkness See night

Daughter See children

Dawn See day

Day

Day is a snow-white Dove of heaven
That from the East glad message brings.
—Thomas Bailey Aldrich (1836–1907) Day and Night

Day!
O'er nights brim, day boils at last;
Boils, pure gold, o'er the cloud-cup's brim.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Pippa Passes

One day well spent is to be preferred to an eternity of error.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) Tusculanarum Disputationum

He is only rich who owns the day. There is no king, rich man, fairy, or demon who possesses such power as that. . . . The days are made on a loom whereof the warp and woof are past and future time.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Society and Solitude

Rosy-fingered Dawn.
—Homer (10th–8th? C. b.c.) Iliad

The day has eyes; the night has ears.
—Proverb

Wait till it is night before saying it has been a fine day.
—French proverb

My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle.
—Old Testament: Job, vii, 6

Listen to the Exhortation of the Dawn!
Look to this Day! For it is Life,
The very Life of Life.
— Salutation of the Dawn (Sanskrit)

The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, I, v, 89

Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day Stands tiptoe on the misty mountaintops.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Romeo and Juliet, III, v, 9

Death

Death is a black camel, which kneels at the gates of all.
—Abd-el-Kader (1807?–1883)

It is good to die before one has done anything deserving death.
—Ananandrides (4th C. b.c.) Fragment

Men fear death as children fear to go in the dark; and as that natural fear in children is increased with tales, so is the other.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Essays: Of Death

He that unburied lies wants not his hearse,
For unto him a Tomb's the Universe.
—Sir Thomas Browne (1605–1682) Religio Medici

We all labor against our own cure, for death is the cure of all diseases.
—Sir Thomas Browne (1605–1682) Religio Medici

The fear of death is worse than death.
—Robert Burton (1577–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

Ah, surely nothing dies but something mourns!
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Don Juan

Death levels all things.
—Claudian (c. 395) De Raptu Proserpinae

These have not the hope of death.
—Dante (1265–1321) Inferno

Death, be not proud, though some have called thee
Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so:
For those, whom thou think'st thou dost overthrow,
Die not, poor Death. . .
—John Donne (1572–1631) Divine Poems: Holy Sonnet

There were some who said that a man at the point of death was more free than all others, because death breaks every bond, and over the dead the united world has no power.
—Fénelon (1651–1715) Telemachus

Death is Nature's expert advice to get plenty of Life.
—Goethe (1749–1832)

We die ourselves a little every time we kill in others something that deserved to live.
—Oscar Hammling (1890–) Laconics

I have been half in love with easeful death, Call'd him soft names in many a mused rhyme.
—John Keats (1795–1821) Ode to a Nightingale

So now he is a legend when he would have preferred to be a man.
—Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy (1929–) in a tribute to her husband, Nov. 1964

Wheresoever ye be, death will overtake you, although ye be in lofty towers.
—The Koran

A man's dying is more the survivors' affair than his own.
—Thomas Mann (1875–1955) The Magic Mountain

The grave's a fine and private place,
But none, I think, do there embrace.
—Andrew Marvell (1621–1678) To His Coy Mistress

Death has a thousand doors to let out life.
I shall find one.
—Philip Massinger (1584–1640) A Very Woman

Whom the gods love dies young.
—Menander (342–291 B.C.)

Dead men tell no tales.
—English proverb

To die at the will of another is to die twice.
—Publilius Syrus (b. 1st C. B.C.) Sententiae

Death seems to provide the minds of the Anglo-Saxon race with a greater fund of innocent amusement than any other single subject.
—Dorothy L. Sayers (1893–1957)

I have a rendezvous with Death
At some disputed barricade . . .
—Alan Seeger (1888–1916) I Have a Rendezvous with Death

Death is a punishment to some, to some a gift, and to many a favor.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65)

Nothing in his life became him like the leaving it . . . .
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Macbeth, I, iv, 7

Imperious Caesar, dead and turn'd to clay, Might stop a hole to keep the wind away.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, V, i, 235

To die, —to sleep,
No more, and by that sleep to say we end
The heart-ache and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to . . . .
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, III, i, 60

Say nothing but good of the dead.
—Solon (638–559 B.C.)

Do not go gentle into that good night,
Old age should burn and rave at close of day;
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.
—Dylan Thomas (1914–1953) Poem to My Father

I saw him now going the way of all flesh.
—John Webster (1580–1625) Westward Ho!, Act II

O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?
—New Testament: I Corinthians, xv, 55

I looked and beheld a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death.
—New Testament: Revelation, vi, 8

Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.
—Old Testament: Genesis, iii, 19

Deceit

God is not averse to deceit in a holy cause.
—Aeschylus (525–456 B.C.)

We are never deceived; we deceive ourselves.
—Goethe (1749–1832)

Hateful to me as the gates of hell,
Is he, who, hiding one thing in his heart, Utters another.
—Homer (c. 10th–8th C. B.C.) Iliad

It is a double pleasure to deceive the deceiver.
—Jean de la Fontaine (1621–1695) Fables

The surest way to be deceived is to think one's self more clever than others.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

You can fool some of the people all of the time, and all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time.
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865)

Listen at the key-hole and you'll hear news of yourself.
—Proverb

Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practise to deceive!
—Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832) Marmion

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,
Men were deceivers ever.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Much Ado About Nothing, II, iii, 65

December See months

Decision and Indecision

There is grief in indecision.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De officiis

The wavering mind is but a base possession.
—Euripides (480–406 B.C.)

There is no more miserable human being than one in whom nothing is habitual but indecision.
—William James (1842–1910) Psychology

Decide not rashly. The decision made Can never be recalled.
—Henry W. Longfellow (1807–1882) Masque of Pandora

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide. . . .
—James Russell Lowell (1819–1891) The Present Crisis

To be or not to be, that is the question . . . .
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, III, i, 56

I am at war twixt will and will not.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Measure for Measure, II, ii, 32

Quick decisions are unsafe decisions.
—Sophocles (495–406 B.C.) Oedipus Tyrannus

Democracy

If liberty and equality, as is thought by some, are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will be best attained when all persons alike share in the government to the utmost.
—Aristotle (384–322 B.C.) Politics

The tyranny of a multitude is a multiplied tyranny.
—Edmund Burke (1729–1797) Letter to Thomas Mercer

Democracy means government by the uneducated, while aristocracy means government by the badly educated.
—G. K. Chesterton (1874–1936) Interview, 1931

The tendency of democracies is, in all things, to mediocrity.
—James Fenimore Cooper (1789–1851) American Democrat

Only if basically the democracy of our day satisfies the mental, moral, and physical wants of the masses living under it, can it continue to exist.
—Dwight D. Eisenhower (1890–1969) Crusade in Europe

The world is weary of statesmen whom democracy has degraded into politicians.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1805–1881)

Democracy has another merit. It allows criticism, and if there isn't public criticism there are bound to be hushed-up scandals.
—E. M. Forster (1879–1970) I Believe

Democracy is based upon the conviction that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people.
—Harry Emerson Fosdick (1878–1969) Democracy

The republican is the only form of government which is not eternally at open or secret war with the rights of mankind.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826) Reply to Address

If we fail now, then we will have forgotten in abundance what we learned in hardship: that democracy rests on faith, that freedom asks more than it gives, and the judgment of God is harshest on those who are most favored.
—Lyndon B. Johnson (1908–1973) Inaugural Address, Jan. 1965

The world is very different now. For man holds in his mortal hands the power to abolish all forms of human poverty and all forms of human life. And yet the same revolutionary beliefs for which our forebears fought are still at issue around the globe . . .
—John F. Kennedy (1917–1963), Inaugural Address, Jan. 1961

All creatures are members of the one family of God.
—The Koran

Democracy gives to every man
The right to be his own oppressor.
—James Russell Lowell (1819–1891) Bigelow Papers

We must define democracy as that form of government and of society which is inspired above every other, with the feeling and consciousness of the dignity of man.
—Thomas Mann (1875–1955) The Coming Victory of Democracy

We must be the great arsenal of democracy.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) Radio Address, 1940

Democracy is unfinished business, not fulfilment; it is a process of always advancing toward fulfilment.
—Raymond Gram Swing (1887–1968)

Democracy is the recurrent suspicion that more than half of the people are right more than half of the time.
—E. B. White (1899–1985)

I believe in democracy because it releases the energies of every human being.
—Woodrow Wilson (1856–1924) Address to Congress, 1917

The world must be made safe for democracy. Its peace must be planted upon the tested foundations of political liberty.
—Woodrow Wilson (1856–1924) Address to Congress, 1917

Dependence and Independence

Each man for himself.
—Geoffrey Chaucer (1340?–1400) Canterbury Tales

The greatest man living may stand in need of the meanest, as much as the meanest does of him.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681)

Even in the common affairs of life, in love, friendship, and marriage, how little security have we when we trust our happiness in the hands of others!
—William Hazlitt (1778–1830) On Living to Oneself

The strongest man in the world is he who stands most alone.
—Henrik Ibsen (1828–1906) An Enemy of the People

No degree of knowledge attainable by man is able to set him above the want of hourly assistance.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784)

To be independent is the business of a few only; it is the privilege of the strong.
—Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900) Beyond Good and Evil

Independence? That's middle class blasphemy. We are all dependent on one another, every soul of us on earth.
—George Bernard Shaw (1856–1950) Pygmalion

Without the help of thousands of others, any one of us would die, naked and starved.
—Alfred E. Smith (1873–1944)

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity, and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity than any other motive whatever.
—William Makepeace Thackeray (1811–1863)

Desire

He begins to die that quits his desires.
—George Herbert (1593–1633) Outlandish Proverbs

Naked I see the camp of those who desire nothing.
—Horace (65–8 B.C.) Odes

We live in our desires rather than in our achievements.
—George Moore (1852–1933) Ave

We desire most what we ought not to have.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. B.C.) Sententiae

If wishes were horses, beggars would ride.
—Scottish proverb

Can one desire too much of a good thing?
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, IV, i, 129

The fewer desires, the more peace.
—Thomas Wilson (1663–1755)

Desire accomplished is sweet to the soul.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xiii, 19

Despair

I want to be forgotten even by God.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Easter Day

The name of the Slough was Despond.
—John Bunyan (1628–1688) Pilgrim's Progress

Despair is the damp of hell, as joy is the serenity of heaven.
—John Donne (1572–1631)

Despondency is not a state of humility. On the contrary, it is the vexation and despair of a cowardly pride. . . .
—Fénelon (1651–1715)

Then black despair,
The shadow of a starless night, was thrown Over the world in which I moved alone.
—Percy B. Shelley (1792–1822) Revolt of Islam

The only refuge from despair is to project one's ego into the world.
—Leo Tolstoy (1828–1910)

When we have lost everything, including hope, life becomes a disgrace and death a duty.
—Voltaire (1694–1778) Merope

Out of the depths have I cried unto Thee, O Lord.
—Old Testament: Psalms, cxxx, 1

Discretion and Indiscretion

An indiscreet man is more hurtful than an ill-natured one; for the latter will only attack his enemies, and those he wishes ill to; the other injures indifferently both friends and foes.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719) The Spectator

He knows not when to be silent who knows not when to speak.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. B.C.)

Least said, soonest mended.
—Charles Dickens (1812–1870) David Copperfield

For good and evil in our actions meet;
Wicked is not much worse than indiscreet.
—John Donne (1572–1631)

A demi-vierge is a woman for whom chastity, from being a temporary asset, has become a permanent liability.
—Oscar Hammling (1890–)

Let your discretion be your tutor; suit the action to the word, the word to the action.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, III, ii, 18

The better part of valour is discretion; in the which better part I have saved my life.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) I Henry IV, V, iv, 121

Be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath.
—New Testament: James, i, 19

Doubt

Doubt whom you will, but never doubt yourself.
—Christian Nestell Bovee (1820–1904)

Doubting charms me not less than knowledge.
—Dante (1265–1321) Inferno, canto xii, l. 93

Just think of the tragedy of teaching children not to doubt.
—Clarence Darrow (1857–1938)

Scepticism is the first step on the road to philosophy.
—Denis Diderot (1713–1784)

To believe with certainty we must begin with doubting.
—Stanislaus Lescynski (1677–1766)

I respect faith, but doubt is what gets you an education.
—Wilson Mizner (1876–1933)

Doubt makes the mountain which faith can move.
—Unknown

Our doubts are traitors
And make us lose the good we oft might win
By fearing to attempt.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Measure for Measure, I, iv, 77

Dreams

The more a man dreams, the less he believes.
—H. L. Mencken (1880–1956) Prejudices

Dreams are the true interpreters of our inclinations, but art is required to sort and understand them.
—Michel de Montaigne (1533–1592) Essays

Those dreams are true which we have in the morning, as the lamp begins to flicker.
—Ovid (43 B.C.–A.D. 18?) Epistles

All that we see or seem Is but a dream within a dream.
—Edgar Allan Poe (1809–1849) A Dream Within a Dream

To sleep; perchance to dream: ay, there's the rub;
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil Must give us pause.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, III, i, 65

We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded out with a sleep.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) The Tempest, IV, i, 156

We rest. A dream has power to poison sleep;
We rise. One wandering thought pollutes the day.
—Percy B. Shelley (1792–1822) Mutability

But I, being poor, have only my dreams;
I have spread my dreams under your feet;
Tread softly, for you tread on my dreams.
—William Butler Yeats (1865–1939) The Cloths of Heaven

Your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions.
—Old Testament: Joel, II, 28

Duty

In doing what we ought we deserve no praise, because it is our duty.
—St. Augustine (354–430)

The fulfilment of spiritual duty in our daily life is vital to our survival.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) Speech, 1949

Do your duty and leave the rest to heaven.
—Pierre Corneille (1606–1684) Horace

The reward of one duty is the power to fill another.
—George Eliot (1819–1880) Daniel Deronda

Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man.
—Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, xii, 13

Up to a certain point it is good for us to know that there are people in the world who will give us love and unquestioned loyalty to the limit of their ability. I doubt, however, if it is good for us to feel assured of this without the accompanying obligation of having to justify this devotion by our behavior.
—Eleanor Roosevelt (1884–1962) This Is My Story

There is no duty we underrate so much as the duty of being happy.
—R. L. Stevenson (1850–1894) Virginibus Puerisque

He who eats the fruit should at least plant the seed.
—Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862)

Duty is what one expects from others.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) Woman of No Importance

Education See learning

Egotism

(See also vanity)

Self-conceit may lead to self-destruction.
—Aesop (6th C. b.c.) The Frog and the Ox

Why should I be angry with a man, for loving himself better than me?
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Essays

Conceit is God's fit to little men.
—Bruce Barton (1886–1967) Conceit

I've never had any pity for conceited people, because I think they carry their comfort about with them.
—George Eliot (1819–1880) The Mill on the Floss

We reproach people for talking about themselves; but it is the subject they treat best.
—Anatole France (1844–1924)

We would rather speak ill of ourselves than not talk of ourselves at all.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

There is not enough love and goodness in the world to throw any of it away on conceited people.
—Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900)

If you love yourself over much, nobody else will love you at all.
—Proverb

Every bird loves to hear himself sing.
—German proverb

Who loves himself need fear no rival.
—Latin proverb

Conceit may puff a man up, but never prop him up.
—John Ruskin (1819–1900) True and Beautiful

Self-love, in nature rooted fast, Attends us first, and leaves us last.
—Jonathan Swift (1667–1745) Cadenus and Vanessa

We are interested in others when they are interested in us.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. b.c.) Sententiae

From his cradle to his grave a man never does a single thing which has any first and foremost object save one—to secure peace of mind, spiritual comfort, for himself.
—Mark Twain (1835–1910) What is Man?

All men think all men mortal but themselves.
—Edward Young (1683–1765) Night Thoughts

Enemy

Wise men learn much from their enemies.
—Aristophanes (444–380 b.c.) The Birds

Every man is his own greatest enemy, and as it were his own executioner.
—Sir Thomas Browne (1605–1682) Religio Medici

You shall judge a man by his foes as well as by his friends.
—Joseph Conrad (1857–1924) Lord Jim

Though thy enemy seems a mouse, yet watch him like a lion.
—Proverb

One enemy can do more hurt than ten friends can do good.
—Jonathan Swift (1667–1745) Letter, 1710

He makes no friend who never made a foe.
—Tennyson (1809–1892) Idylls of the King

Rejoice not over thy greatest enemy being dead, but remember that we die all.
—Apocrypha: Ecclesiasticus

A man's foes shall be they of his own household.
—New Testament: Matthew x, 36

Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you . . . .
—New Testament: Matthew, v, 44

Envy

Those that are not envied are never wholly happy.
—Aeschylus (525–456 b.c.) Agamemnon

Envy not greatness: for thou mak'st thereby Thyself the worse, and so the distance greater.
—George Herbert (1593–1633) The Church

All the tyrants of Sicily never invented a worse torment than envy.
—Horace (65–8 b.c.) Epistles

No man likes to be surpassed by those of his own level.
—Livy (59 b.c.–a.d. 17) Annales

Since we cannot attain to greatness, let us revenge ourselves by railing at it.
—Michel de Montaigne (1533–1592) Essays

It is a nobler fate to be envied than to be pitied.
—Pindar (c. 522–442 b.c.) Pythian Odes

The truest mark of being born with great qualities is being born without envy.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

No metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Merchant of Venice, IV, i, 123

Where envying and strife is, there is confusion, and every evil work.
—New Testament: James, iii, 16

Equality and Inequality

The only stable state is the one in which all men are equal before the law.
—Aristotle (384–322 b.c.) Politics

We hold these truths to be self-evident—that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.
—Declaration of Independence

Before God we are all equally wise—equally foolish.
—Albert Einstein (1879–1955) Cosmic Religion

Men are made by nature unequal. It is vain, therefore, to treat them as if they were equal.
—James Anthony Froude (1818–1894)

Though all men are made of one metal, yet they were not cast all in the same mold.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) Gnomologia

That all men are equal is a proposition to which at ordinary times no sane individual has ever given his assent.
—Aldous Huxley (1894–1963) Proper Studies

And our sorrowing gaze turns also to the other children of God everywhere, suffering because of race and economic conditions, at once complex and giving reason for anxiety, or through the limitation on the exercise of their natural and civil rights.
—Pope John XXIII (1881–1963) April 17, 1960

All animals are created equal—but some animals are created more equal than others.
—George Orwell (1903–1950) Animal Farm

The only real equality is in the cemetery.
—German proverb

Nature knows no equality; its sovereign law is subordination and dependence.
—Marquis de Vauvenargues (1715–1747) Reflections

Error

There is many a slip
'Twixt the cup and the lip.
—Richard Harris Barham (1788–1845) Ingoldsby Legends

I can pardon everybody's mistakes except my own.
—Marcus Cato (234–149 B.C.)

Who errs and mends, to God himself commends.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

Mistake, error, is the discipline through which we advance.
—William Ellery Channing (1780–1842)

It is the nature of every man to err, but only the fool perseveres in error.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) Philippicae

The cautious seldom err.
—Confucius (c. 551–478 B.C.) Analects

Errors, like straws, upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below.
—John Dryden (1631–1700) All for Love

Even a mistake may turn out to be the one thing necessary to a worthwhile achievement.
—Henry Ford (1863–1947) Interview, 1938

Dark Error's other hidden side is truth.
—Victor Hugo (1802–1885) Legend of the Centuries

The man who makes no mistakes does not usually make anything.
—Bishop W. C. Magee (1821–1891)

To err is human, to forgive divine.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Criticism

The wise course is to profit from the mistakes of others.
—Terence (c. 190–150 B.C.)

I fear our mistakes far more than the strategy of our enemies.
—Thucydides (471?–400? B.C.) Funeral Oration

The progress of the rivers to the ocean is not so rapid as that of man to error.
—Voltaire (1694–1778) Philosophical Dictionary

Evil

Evil events from evil causes spring.
—Aristophanes (444–380 B.C.)

Better suffer a great evil than do a little one.
—Henry George Bohn (1796–1884) Handbook of Proverbs

Often the fear of one evil leads us into a worse.
—Nicolas Boileau (1636–1711) The Poetic Art

God bears with the wicked, but not forever.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

Evil to him who thinks evil. [Honi soit qui mal y pense.]
—Edward III (1327–1377) Motto of the Order of the Garter

A wicked man is his own hell.
—Thomas Fuller (1606–1661) Gnomologia, No. 460

Don't let us make imaginary evils, when you know we have so many real ones to encounter.
—Oliver Goldsmith (1730–1774)

The source of all wars, the source of all evil, lies in us.
—Pierre Lecomte du Noüy (1883–1947) Human Destiny

The evil best known is the most tolerable.
—Livy (59 B.C.–A.D. 17) History of Rome

An evil life is a kind of death.
—Ovid (43 B.C.–A.D. 18?) Epistulae ex Ponto

No evil can happen to a good man, either in life or after death.
—Socrates (470?–399 B.C.)

Every one that doeth evil hateth the light.
—New Testament: John, iii, 20

I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like the green bay tree. Yet he passed away, and lo, he was not.
—Old Testament: Isaiah, lv, 7

Fret not thyself because of evildoers . . . for they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.
—Old Testament: Psalms, xxxvii, 1–2

Experience

All experience is an arch to build upon.
—Henry Adams (1838–1918) Education of Henry Adams

It is costly wisdom that is bought by experience.
—Roger Ascham (1515–1568) Schoolmaster

Thou shalt know by experience how salt the savor is of another's bread, and how sad a path it is to climb and descend another's stairs.
—Dante (1265–1321) Paradiso

Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

The finished man of the world must eat of every apple once.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Conduct of Life

Happy is he who gains wisdom from another's mishap.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. B.C.) Sententiae

Experience is the name everyone gives to his mistakes.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) Lady Windermere's Fan

Faith

Faith is a higher faculty than reason.
—Philip James Bailey (1816–1902)

I believe in the incomprehensibility of God.
—Honoré de Balzac (1799–1850)

To me, faith means not worrying.
—John Dewey (1859–1952)

Faith is not belief. Belief is passive. Faith is active. It is vision which passes inevitably into action.
—Edith Hamilton (1867–1963) Witness to the Truth

Faith may be defined briefly as an illogical belief in the occurrence of the improbable.
—H. L. Mencken (1880–1956) Prejudices, Series iii

Faith is like love; it cannot be forced.
—Arthur Schopenhauer (1788–1860)

Faith is the antiseptic of the soul.
—Walt Whitman (1819–1892) Leaves of Grass, preface

We walk by faith, not by sight.
—New Testament: II Corinthians, v, 7

If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove: and nothing shall be impossible unto you.
—New Testament: Matthew, xvii, 20

Family See marriage, father.

Fate

Nor sitting at his hearth at home doth man escape his appointed doom.
—Aeschylus (525–456 B.C.) The Choephorae

Destiny is not a matter of chance, it is a matter of choice; it is not a thing to be waited for, it is a thing to be achieved.
—William Jennings Bryan (1860–1925) Speech, 1899

'Tis fate that flings the dice, and as she flings
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings.
—John Dryden (1631–1700) Jupiter Cannot Alter the Decrees of Fate

The moving finger writes; and having writ Moves on; nor all your Piety nor Wit Shall lure it back to cancel half a Line.
—Edward Fitzgerald (1809–1883) tr.: Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám

Man supposes that he directs his life and governs his actions, when his existence is irretrievably under the control of destiny.
—Goethe (1749–1832)

That which God writes on thy forehead, thou wilt come to it.
—The Koran

Our hour is marked, and no one can claim a moment of life beyond what fate has predestined.
—Napoleon Bonaparte (1811–1884)

This generation of Americans has a rendezvous with destiny.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) Address, 1936

Fate leads the willing, and drags along those who hang back.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65)

There is a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, V, ii, 10

All things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good and to the clean, and to the unclean. . . .
—Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, ix, 2

Father

Diogenes struck the father when the son swore.
—Robert Burton (1577–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

He that has his father for judge goes safe to the trial.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

One father is more than a hundred schoolmasters.
—George Herbert (1593–1633) Jacula Prudentum

If a man strike his father his hand shall be cut off.
— The Code of Hammurabi

It is a wise father that knows his own child.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Merchant of Venice, II, ii, 80

A wise son maketh a glad father.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, x, i

He that honoureth his father shall have a long life.
—Apocrypha: Ecclesiasticus, iii, 6

Faults

What an absurd thing it is to pass over all the valuable parts of a man, and fix our attention on his infirmities.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719)

The greatest of faults, I should say, is to be conscious of none.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) Heroes and Hero-Worship

Men ought to be most annoyed by the sufferings which come from their own faults.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) Epistolae ad Fratrem

The defects of great men are the consolation of dunces.
—Isaac D'Israeli (1766–1848)

All his faults were such that one loved him still the better for them.
—Oliver Goldsmith (1730–1774) The Good-Natur'd Man

A fault confessed is more than half amended.
—Sir John Harington (1561–1612)

If we had no faults, we should not take so much pleasure in remarking them in others.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

He who loves not the loved one's faults does not truly love.
—Spanish proverb

The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Julius Caesar, I, ii, 140

Fear

No one loves the man whom he fears.
—Aristotle (384–322 B.C.)

We listen'd and look'd sideways up!
Fear at my heart, as at a cup,
My life-blood seem'd to sip.
—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834) Ancient Mariner

Fear always springs from ignorance.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) The American Scholar

Fear is the parent of cruelty.
—James Anthony Froude (1818–1894)

Many may not love us, but all shall fear us.
—Heinrich Himmler (1900–1945)

Let us never negotiate out of fear. But let us never fear to negotiate.
—John F. Kennedy (1917–1963), Inaugural Address, 1961

Apprehensions are greater in proportion as things are unknown.
—Livy (B.C. 59–A.D. 17) Annales

Fear is a feeling that is stronger than love.
—Pliny the Younger (62–113) Letters

The only thing we have to fear is fear itself.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) Inaugural Address, 1933

His flight was madness; when our actions do not,
Our fears do make us traitors.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Macbeth, IV, ii, 3

To him who is in fear everything rustles.
—Sophocles (495–406 B.C.)

Fear, like pain, looks and sounds worse than it feels.
—Rebecca West (1892–1983)

February See months

Fidelity and Infidelity

Give me a man that is capable of a devotion to anything, rather than a cold, calculating average of all the virtues.
—Bret Harte (1838–1902) Two Men of Sandy Bar

The fidelity of most men is merely an invention of self-love to win confidence . . .
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

Fidelity bought with money is overcome by money.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) Agamemnon

Oh, where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) II Henry IV, V, i, 166

To God, thy countrie, and thy friend be true.
—Henry Vaughan (1622–1695) Rules and Lessons

Be thou faithful unto death.
—New Testament: Revelation, ii, 10

Flattery

A flatterer is a friend who is your inferior or pretends to be so.
—Aristotle (384–322 B.C.) Nicomachean Ethics

We sometimes think that we hate flattery, but we only hate the manner in which it is done.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

'Tis hard to find a man of great estate,
That can distinguish flatterers from friends.
—Horace (65–8 B.C.)

When flatterers meet, the Devil goes to dinner.
—John Ray (1627?–1705) English Proverbs

But when I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does, being then most flattered.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Julius Caesar, II, i, 208

They do abuse the king that flatter him:
For flattery is the bellows blows up sin.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Pericles, I, ii, 38

A flattering mouth worketh ruin.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xxvi, 28

Folly and Fools

The folly of one man is the fortune of another.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Essays: Of Fortune

A sucker is born every minute.
—P. T. Barnum (1810–1891)

The hours of folly are measur'd by the clock; but of wisdom, no clock can measure.
—William Blake (1757–1827) Marriage of Heaven and Hell

A fool always finds one still more foolish to admire him.
—Nicolas Boileau (1636–1711) The Poetic Art

And fools cannot hold their tongue.
—Geoffrey Chaucer (1340?–1400) Romaunt of the Rose

The first degree of folly is to conceit one's self wise; the second to profess it; the third to despise counsel.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

When lovely woman stoops to folly,
And finds too late that men betray,
What charm can soothe her melancholy?
What art can wash her guilt away?
—Oliver Goldsmith (1730–1774) Vicar of Wakefield

I am always afraid of a fool. One cannot be sure that he is not a knave as well.
—William Hazlitt (1778–1830) Characteristics

Folly pursues us in every period of life. If any one appears wise, it is only because his follies are proportioned to his age and fortune.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

There is no fool like an old fool.
—John Lyly (1554?–1606)

I enjoy vast delight in the folly of mankind; and, God be praised, that is an inexhaustible source of entertainment.
—Lady Mary Wortly Montagu (1689–1762) Letter

Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) An Essay on Criticism

If every fool wore a crown, we'd all be kings.
—Welsh proverb

The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, V, i, 34

Give me the young man who has brains enough to make a fool of himself.
—R. L. Stevenson (1850–1894) Virginibus Puerisque

A fool and his money are soon parted.
—Unknown

The best way to silence any friend of yours whom you know to be a fool is to induce him to hire a hall.
—Woodrow Wilson (1856–1924) Speech, 1916

The wise man's eyes are in his head, but the fool walketh in darkness.
—Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, ii, 14

Forgetfulness

A man must get a thing before he can forget it.
—Oliver Wendell Holmes (1809–1894) Medical Essays

Blessed are the forgetful; for they get the better of even their blunders.
—Friedrick Nietzsche (1844–1900) Beyond Good and Evil

We have all forgotten more than we remember.
—Proverb

We bury love,
Forgetfulness grows over it like grass;
That is a thing to weep for, not the dead.
—Alexander Smith (1830–1867) City Poems

If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning.
—Old Testament: Psalms, cxxxvii, 5

Foresight See prudence

Forgiveness

You may pardon much to others, nothing to yourself.
—Ausonius (f. 4th C. A.D.) Epigrams

Those who forgive most shall be most forgiven.
—Philip James Bailey (1816–1902) Festus

He who forgives readily only invites offense.
—Pierre Corneille (1606–1684) Cinna

God may forgive you, but I never can.
—Queen Elizabeth I (1533–1603) to the Countess of Nottingham

It is often easier to forgive those who have wronged us than those whom we have wronged.
—Oscar Hammling (1890–) Laconics

Know all and you will pardon all.
—Thomas à Kempis (1380–1471) Imitation of Christ

We pardon in proportion as we love.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

We read that we ought to forgive our enemies; but we do not read that we ought to forgive our friends.
—Cosimo de' Medici (1519–1574)

If the injured one could read your heart, you may be sure he would understand and pardon.
—R. L. Stevenson (1850–1894) Truth of Intercourse

There is nothing so advantageous to a man than a forgiving disposition.
—Terence (c. 190–150 B.C.) Adelphi

Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do.
—New Testament: Luke, xxiii, 34

A woman may consent to forget and forgive, but she never will drop the habit of referring to the matter now and then.
—Unknown

Fortune

Fortune is a god and rules men's lives.
—Aeschylus (525–456 B.C.) The Choephorae

Every man is the architect of his own fortune.
—Appius Claudius (f. 312 B.C.)

All fortune is to be conquered by bearing it.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) Advancement of Learning

I am not now in fortune's power;
He that is down can fall no lower.
—Samuel Butler (1612–1680) Hudibras

Fortune hath somewhat the nature of a woman; if she be too much wooed, she is the farther off.
—Emperor Charles V (1500–1588)

It is fortune, not wisdom, that rules man's life.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.)

Ill fortune seldom comes alone.
—John Dryden (1631–1700) Cymon and Iphigenia, Act I

Fortune never seems so blind as to those upon whom she confers no favors.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

Not many men have both good fortune and good sense.
—Livy (50 B.C.–A.D. 17) History of Rome

The wheel goes round and round
And some are up and some are on the down
And still the wheel goes round.
—Josephine Pollard (1843–1892) Wheel of Fortune

Fortune can take from us nothing but what she gave us.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. B.C.) Sententiae

Fear of the future is worse than one's present fortune.
—Quintilian (40 –c. 100)

Everyone is the architect of his own fortune.
—Abbé Regnier (1794–?) Satire

Fortune, that arrant whore Ne'er turns the key to the poor.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) King Lear, II, iv, 52

Freedom

The cause of freedom is the cause of God.
—William Lisle Bowles (1762–1850) to Edmund Burke

A man can be free even within prison walls. Freedom is something spiritual. Whoever has once had it, can never lose it. There are some people who are never free outside a prison.
—Bertold Brecht (1898–1956) A Penny for the Poor

Hereditary bondsmen! Know ye not Who would be free themselves must strike the blow?
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Childe Harold

Perfect freedom is reserved for the man who lives by his own work and in that work does what he wants to do.
—Robin George Collingwood (1889–1943) Speculum Mentis

I am as free as nature first made man.
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran.
—John Dryden (1631–1700) Conquest of Granada

Freedom from fear and injustice and oppression will be ours only in the measure that men who value such freedom are ready to sustain its possession—to defend it against every thrust from within or without.
—Dwight D. Eisenhower (1890–1969) Crusade in Europe

No man is free who is not master of himself.
—Epictetus (1st C. A.D.) Discourses

No man is wholly free. He is a slave to wealth, or to fortune, or the laws, or the people restrain him from acting according to his will alone.
—Euripides (480–406 B.C.) Hecuba

The right to personal freedom comes second in importance to the duty of maintaining the race.
—Adolf Hitler (1889–1945) Mein Kampf

Who then is free? the wise man who is lord over himself; Whom neither poverty nor death, nor chains alarm, strong to withstand his passions and despise honors, and who is completely finished and founded off in himself.
—Horace (65–8 B.C.) Satires

Every man has a right to utter what he thinks truth, and every other man has a right to knock him down for it.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) in Boswell's Life

The most unfree souls go west and shout of freedom. Men are freest when they are most unconscious of freedom. The shout is a rattling of chains.
—D. H. Lawrence (1885–1930) Studies in Classic American Literature

Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not for themselves, and, under a just God cannot long retain it.
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865) Letter, 1859

If I have freedom in my love,
And in my soul am free,
Angels alone, that soar above,
Enjoy such liberty.
—Richard Lovelace (1618–1658) To Althea from Prison

There is only one cure for the evils which newly acquired freedom produces, and that is more freedom.
—Thomas Macaulay (1800–1859) Essay on Milton

In the modern social order, the person is sacrificed to the individual. The individual is given universal suffrage, equality of rights, freedom of opinion; while the person, isolated, naked, with no social armor to sustain and protect him, is left to the mercy of all the devouring forces which threaten the life of the soul . . . .
—Jacques Maritain (1882–1973) Three Reformers

Oh, Lord, I want to be free, want to be free;
Rainbow round my shoulder, wings on my feet.
—Unknown, American Negro Spiritual

Is any man free except the one who can pass his life as he pleases?
—Persius (34–62) Satires

The people who settled in New England came here for religious freedom, but religious freedom to them meant freedom only for their kind of religion. . . . This attitude seems to be our attitude in many situations today.
—Eleanor Roosevelt (1884–1962)

Man is born free—and everywhere he is in irons.
—Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712–1778) Social Contract

No one can be perfectly free till all are free.
—Herbert Spencer (1820–1903) Social Statics

There are times in the lives of all people when freedom is the twin of duty, sacrifice the companion of happiness, and when courage—parent of fortitude, endurance, determination—is the first virtue.
—Dorothy Thompson (1894–1961) On the Record

I would rather sit on a pumpkin and have it all to myself, than to be crowded on a velvet cushion.
—Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862) Walden

I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.
— Attributed to Voltaire by a later biographer

Freedom exists only where the people take care of the government.
—Woodrow Wilson (1856–1924) Speech, 1912

Friends

One friend in a lifetime is much; two are many; three are hardly possible. Friendship needs a certain parallelism of life, a community of thought, a rivalry of aim.
—Henry Adams (1838–1918) Education of Henry Adams

Beast knows beast; birds of a feather flock together.
—Aristotle (384–322 B.C.) Rhetoric

Thy friendship oft has made my heart to ache:
Do be my enemy—for friendship's sake.
—William Blake (1757–1827) To H.

Friendships multiply joys and divide griefs.
—Henry George Bohn (1796–1884) Handbook of Proverbs

I have loved my friends as I do virtue, my soul, my God.
—Sir Thomas Browne (1605–1682) Religio Medici

Tell me what company thou keepest, and I'll tell thee what thou art.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

Endeavor, as much as you can, to keep company with people above you.
—Lord Chesterfield (1694–1773) Letters

Never injure a friend, even in jest.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Amicitia

Friendship often ends in love; but love in friendship, never.
—Charles C. Colton (1780?–1832) Lacon

Chance makes our parents, but choice makes our friends.
—Jacques DeLille (1738–1813) Pitié

Animals are such agreeable friends—they ask no questions, they pass no criticisms.
—George Eliot (1819–1880)

The dearest friends are separated by impassable gulfs.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Essays

The only way to have a friend is to be one.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Essays

Men who know the same things are not long the best company for each other.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882)

In prosperity it is very easy to find a friend; in adversity, nothing is so difficult.
—Epictetus (1st C. A.D.) Encheiridion

Real friends are our greatest joy and our greatest sorrow. It were almost to be wished that all true and faithful friends should expire on the same day.
—Fénelon (1651–1715)

If you have one true friend you have more than your share.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) Gnomologia

There is no better looking-glass than an old friend.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) Gnomologia

'Tis thus that on the choice of friends
Our good or evil name depends.
—John Gay (1688–1732) Old Woman and Her Cats

There is no desert like being friendless.
—Baltasar Gracián (1601–1658)

To have a great man for an intimate friend seems pleasant to those who have never tried it; those who have, fear it.
—Horace (65–8 B.C.) Epistulae

I never considered a difference of opinion in politics, in religion, in philosophy, as cause for withdrawing from a friend.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826) Letter, 1800

An injured friend is the bitterest of foes.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826)

I find as I grow older that I love those most whom I loved first.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826) Letter, 1787

I live in the crowds of jollity, not so much to enjoy company as to shun myself.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Rasselas

If my friends are one-eyed, I look at them in profile.
—Joseph Joubert (1754–1824) Pensées

In friendship, as in love, we are often more happy from the things we are ignorant of than from those we are acquainted with.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

If you want to make a dangerous man your friend, let him do you a favor.
—Lewis E. Lawes (1883–1947)

The vulgar estimate friends by the advantage to be derived from them.
—Ovid (43 B.C.–A.D. 18?)

It is better to be alone than in ill company.
—George Pettie (1548–1589)

Histories are more full of examples of the fidelity of dogs than of friends.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Letter, 1709

A friend in need is a friend indeed.
—English Proverb

It is fun to be in the same decade with you.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) in a cable to Winston Churchill

He that goeth to bed with dogs ariseth with fleas.
—James Sandford (f. 1572) Hours of Recreation

The principal task of friendship is to foster one's friends' illusions.
—Arthur Schnitzler (1862–1931) Anatole

Friendship always benefits; love sometimes injures.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) Epistulae ad Lucilium

To lose a friend is the greatest of all evils, but endeavour rather to rejoice that you possessed him than to mourn his loss.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) Epistulae ad Lucilium

Keep thy friend under thine own life's key.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) All's Well that Ends Well, I, i, 74

Those friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel;
But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
Of each new-hatch'd, unfledg'd comrade.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, I, iii, 59

To wail friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome—profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Love's Labour Lost, V, ii, 759

I am not of that feather to shake off
My friend when he must need me.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Timon of Athens, I, i, 100

The most I can do for my friend is simply to be his friend.
—Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862) Journal, 1841

God save me from my friends. I can protect myself from my enemies.
—Marshal de Villars (1653–1734)

Friendship's the wine of life.
—Edward Young (1683–1765) Night Thoughts

A faithful friend is a strong defense: and he that hath found such an one hath found a treasure.
—Apocrypha: Ecclesiasticus, vi, 14

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.
—New Testament: John, xv, 13

Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided.
—Old Testament: II Samuel, i, 23

A friend is one who dislikes the same people that you dislike.
—Unknown

Future

We are always doing something for Posterity, but I would fain see Posterity do something for us.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719) The Spectator

You can never plan the future by the past.
—Edmund Burke (1729–1797) Letter

For my part, I think that a knowledge of the future would be a disadvantage.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Devinatione

I never think of the future. It comes soon enough.
—Albert Einstein (1879–1955)

The future is a convenient place for dreams.
—Anatole France (1844–1924)

I know of no way of judging the future but by the past.
—Patrick Henry (1736–1799) Speech, 1775

Trust no future, howe'er pleasant!
Let the dead Past bury its dead!
—Henry W. Longfellow (1801–1882) Psalm of Life

The mind that is anxious about the future is miserable.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) Epistulae ad Lucilium

We know what we are, but know not what we may be.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, IV, v, 43

Take no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself.
—New Testament: Matthew, vi, 34

Garden and Flowers

Who loves a garden still his Eden keeps . . . .
—Amos Bronson Alcott (1799–1888)

Ah, Sunflower, weary of time,
Who countest the steps of the sun;
Seeking after that sweet golden clime,
Where the traveller's journey is done . . . .
—William Blake (1757–1827) The Sunflower

God the first garden made, and the first city Cain.
—Abraham Cowley (1618–1667) The Garden

Loveliest of trees, the cherry now
Is hung with bloom along the bough,
And stands about the woodland ride
Wearing white for Eastertide.
—A. E. Housman (1859–1936)

Your sacred plants, if here below,
Only among the plants will grow.
Society is all but rude,
To this delicious solitude.
—Andrew Marvell (1621–1678) The Garden

Many things grow in the garden that were never sowed there.
—Proverb

Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Sonnets, xciv

Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: And yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.
—New Testament: Matthew, vi, 28

The Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there He put the man whom He had formed.
—Old Testament: Genesis, ii, 8

Generosity See gifts and giving

Genius

Doing easily what others find difficult is talent; doing what is impossible for talent is genius.
—Henri-Frederic Amiel (1828–1881) Journal

Genius is mainly an affair of energy.
—Matthew Arnold (1822–1888) Essays in Criticism

I have known no man of genius who had not to pay, in some affliction or defect either physical or spiritual, for what the gods had given him.
—Max Beerbohm (1872–1956) The Pines

Patience is a necessary ingredient of genius.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1805–1881) Contarini Fleming

Genius is one percent inspiration and ninety-nine percent perspiration.
—Thomas A. Edison (1847–1931) Newspaper interview

Every man of genius sees the world at a different angle from his fellows, and there is his tragedy.
—Havelock Ellis (1859–1939) Dance of Life

Genius is the power of lighting one's own fire.
—John Foster (1770–1843)

A man of genius makes no mistakes. His errors are volitional and are the portals of discovery.
—James Joyce (1882–1941) Ulysses

Gift, like genius, I often think only means an infinite capacity for taking pains.
—Jane Ellice Hopkins (1836–1904)

Genius is a promontory jutting out into the infinite.
—Victor Hugo (1802–1885) William Shakespeare

Genius begets great works; labor alone finished them.
—Joseph Joubert (1754–1824) Pensées

One science only will one genius fit;
So vast is art, so narrow human wit.
—Alexander Pope (1668–1744) Essay on Criticism

The poets' scrolls will outlive the monuments of stone.
Genius survives; all else is claimed by death.
—Edmund Spenser (1552?–1599) Shepherd's Calendar

There is a certain characteristic common to all those whom we call geniuses. Each of them has a consciousness of being a man apart.
—Miguel de Unamuno (1864–1936) Essays and Soliloquies

Gifts and Giving

It is easy to become generous with other people's property.
—Latin proverb

The most important thing in any relationship is not what you get but what you give. . . . In any case, the giving of love is an education in itself.
—Eleanor Roosevelt (1884–1963)

You must be fit to give before you can be fit to receive.
—James Stephens (1882–1950)

I fear the Greeks, even when they bring gifts.
—Vergil (70–19 b.c.) Aeneid

It is more blessed to give than to receive.
—New Testament: Acts, xx, 35

Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?
—New Testament: Matthew, vii, 9

God

God's mouth knows not to utter falsehood, but he will perform each word.
—Aeschylus (525–456 b.c.) Prometheus

Nature herself has imprinted on the minds of all the idea of God.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) De Natura Deorum

Earth with her thousand voices, praises God
—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834)

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform.
—William Cowper (1731–1800) Light Shining out of Darkness

Father expected a great deal of God. He didn't actually accuse God of inefficiency, but when he prayed his tone was loud and angry, like that of a disatisfied guest in a carelessly managed hotel.
—Clarence Day (1874–1935) God and My Father

God tempers the cold to the shorn lamb.
—Henri Estienne (d. 1520) Premises

There is no God but God.
—The Koran, Bk. iii

I live and love in God's peculiar light.
—Michelangelo (1475–1564)

God never shuts one door but he opens another.
—Irish proverb

Had I but served my God with half the zeal
I served my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Henry VIII, III, ii, 456

Man proposes, but God disposes.
—Thomas à Kempis (1380–1471) Imitation of Christ

If God didn't exist, man would have to invent Him.
—Voltaire (1694–1778)

If God be for us, who can be against us?
—New Testament: Romans, viii, 31

God is our refuge and our strength, a very present help in trouble.
—Old Testament: Psalms, xlvi, i

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork.
—Old Testament: Psalms, xix, i.

Goodness

Goodness is easier to recognize than to define; only the greatest novelists can portray good people.
—W. H. Auden (1907–1973) I Believe

It is as hard for the good to suspect evil, as it is for the bad to suspect good.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.)

Good and bad men are each less so than they seem.
—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834) Table-Talk

True goodness springs from a man's own heart. All men are born good.
—Confucius (c. 551–479 b.c.) Analects

The ground that a good man treads is hallowed.
—Goethe (1749–1832) Torquato Tasso

Let them be good that love me, though but few.
—Ben Jonson (1572–1637) Cynthia's Revels

The greatest pleasure I know is to do a good action by stealth, and to have it found out by accident.
—Charles Lamb (1775–1834)

There is no man so good, who, were he to submit all his thoughts and actions to the laws, would not deserve hanging ten times in his life.
—Michel de Montaigne (1533–1592) Essays

Goodness is a special kind of truth and beauty. It is truth and beauty in human behavior.
—Harry Allen Overstreet (1895–1970)

The good die young.
—English proverb

He is so good that he is good for nothing.
—Italian proverb

The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Julius Caesar, III, ii, 81

The good man is his own friend.
—Sophocles (495–406 b.c.) Oedipus Coloneus

Be good, and you will be lonesome.
—Mark Twain (1835–1910)

Government

The marvel of history is the patience with which men and women submit to burdens unnecessarily laid upon them by their governments.
—William E. Borah (1865–1940) Speech in U.S. Senate

And having looked to Government for bread, on the very first scarcity they will turn and bite the hand that fed them.
—Edmund Burke (1729–1797)

A thousand years scarce serve to form a state;
An hour may lay it in the dust.
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Childe Harold

Self-government is the natural government of man.
—Henry Clay (1777–1852) Speech, 1818

No man has any right to rule who is not better than the people over whom he rules.
—Cyrus the Elder (600?–529 b.c.)

I can retain neither respect nor affection for a Government which has been moving from wrong to wrong in order to defend its immorality.
—Mohandas K. Gandhi (1869–1948)

The spirit of resistance to government is so valuable on certain occasions that I wish it to be always kept alive.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826) to Abigail Adams

No man is good enough to govern another man without that other's consent.
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865) Speech, 1854

That is the best government which desires to make the people happy, and knows how to make them happy.
—Thomas B. Macaulay (1800–1859)

If men be good, government cannot be bad.
—William Penn (1644–1718) Fruits of Solitude

Oligarchy: A government resting on a valuation of property, in which the rich have power and the poor man is deprived of it.
—Plato (428–347 b.c.) The Republic

That form of government is best which includes monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy.
—Polybius (205?–125 b.c.) Histories

Any government, like any family, can for a year spend a little more than it earns. But you and I know that a continuance of that habit means the poorhouse.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) Radio Speech, 1932

Gratitude and Ingratitude

Gratitude is the sign of noble souls.
—Aesop (6th C. b.c.) Androcles

Earth produces nothing worse than an ungrateful man.
—Ausonius (f. 4th C. b.c.) Epigrams

Next to ingratitude, the most painful thing to bear is gratitude.
—Henry Ward Beecher (1813–1887)

Words are but empty thanks.
—Colley Cibber (1671–1757) Women's Wit

When I'm not thanked at all I'm thanked enough.
—Henry Fielding (1707–1754)

A man is very apt to complain of the ingratitude of those who have risen far above him.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) in Boswell's Life

A man who is ungrateful is often less to blame than his benefactor.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

The gratitude of most men is but a secret desire of receiving greater benefits.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

Gratitude is the least of virtues, but ingratitude the worst of vices.
—Proverb

Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude . . . .
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, II, vii, 174

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is To have a thankless child.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) King Lear, I, iv, 312

Do you like gratitude? I don't. If pity is akin to love, gratitude is akin to the other thing.
—George Bernard Shaw (1856–1950) Arms and the Man

Alas! the gratitude of men Hath often left me mourning.
—William Wordsworth (1770–1850) Simon Lee

Greatness

When the dust of death has choked
A great man's voice, the common words he said Turn oracles.
—Elizabeth Barrett Browning (1812–1861)

The price of greatness is responsibility.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) Speech, 1943

The world cannot live at the level of its great men.
—Sir James Frazer (1854–1941) The Golden Bough

No really great man ever thought himself so.
—William Hazlitt (1778–1830) Table-Talk

There would be no great ones if there were no little ones.
—George Herbert (1593–1633)

Be not afraid of greatness. Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Twelfth Night, II, v, 156

Great men are not always wise.
—Old Testament: Job, xxxii, 9

Greed See avarice

Grief

It is dangerous to abandon one's self to the luxury of grief: it deprives one of courage, and even of the wish for recovery.
—Henri-Frederic Amiel (1828–1881) Journal, 1871

There is no grief which time does not lessen and soften.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) Epistles

Grief is itself a medicine.
—William Cowper (1731–1800) Charity

Grief is the agony of an instant: the indulgence of grief the blunder of a life.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881) Vivian Grey

The only cure for grief is action.
—George Henry Lewes (1817–1878)

If our inward griefs were seen written on our brow, how many would be pitied who are now envied.
—Metastasio (1698–1782) Guiseppe Riconosciuto

Grief is a tree that has tears for its fruit.
—Philemon (361?–263? b.c.) Fragment

Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me,
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) King John, III, iv, 93

Guilt

The pot calls the kettle black.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

Guilt is present in the very hesitation, even though the deed be not committed.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) De Officiis

Secret guilt by silence is betrayed.
—John Dryden (1631–1700) The Hind and the Panther

Men's minds are too ready to excuse guilt in themselves.
—Livy (59 b.c.–17 a.d.) History

He that knows no guilt can know no fear.
—Philip Massinger (1583–1640)

He confesseth himself guilty, who refuseth to come to trial.
—Proverb

The lady doth protest too much, methinks.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, III, ii, 242

In other words, psychoanalysts relieve their patients from feeling guilty about things of which they are not guilty, and leave them with the sense of guilt about things of which they really are guilty.
—Gregory Zilboorg (1890–1959) Psychoanalysis and Religion

Habit

Habit is a sort of second nature.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) De Finibus

It seems, in fact, as though the second half of a man's life is made up of nothing but the habits he has accumulated during the first half.
—Feodor Dostoevski (1821–1881) The Possessed

Habit is a cable; we weave a thread of it every day, and at last we cannot break it.
—Horace Mann (1796–1859)

How use doth breed a habit in a man!
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Two Gentlemen of Verona, V, iv, 1

Hands

Living from hand to mouth, soon satisfi'd.
—GUILLAUME DU BARTAS (1544–1590) Devine Weekes

Many hands make light work.
—PROVERB

One hand washeth the other.
—SENECA (4? B.C.–A.D 65) Apocolocyntosis

All the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Macbeth, V, i, 57

See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand!
O, that I were a glove upon that hand,
That I might touch that cheek!
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Romeo and Juliet, II, ii, 23

Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth.
—NEW TESTAMENT: Matthew, vi, 3

His hand will be against every man and every man's hand against him.
—OLD TESTAMENT: Genesis, xvi, 12

Happiness

Hold him alone truly fortunate who has ended his life in happy well-being.
—AESCHYLUS (525–456 B.C.) Agamemnon

Happiness is at once the best, the noblest and the pleasantest of things.
—ARISTOTLE (384–322 B.C.) Nicomachean Ethics

What is given by the gods more desirable than a happy hour?
—CATULLUS (84?–54 B.C.) Odes

The happiness of life is made up of minute fractions—the little soon forgotten charities of a kiss or smile, a kind look, a heartfelt compliment, and the countless infinitesimals of pleasurable and genial feeling.
—SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE (1772–1834) Friend

To fill the hour—that is happiness.
—RALPH WALDO EMERSON (1803–1882) Experience

Often the greatest enemy of present happiness is past happiness too well remembered.
—OSCAR HAMMLING (1890–)

Call no man happy till you know the nature of his death!
He is at best but fortunate.
—HERODOTUS (484–424? B.C.)

And there is even a happiness
That makes the heart afraid.
—THOMAS HOOD (1799–1845) Ode to Melancholy

The supreme happiness of life is the conviction that we are loved.
—VICTOR HUGO (1802–1885) Les Misérables

He is happiest of whom the world says least, good or bad.
—THOMAS JEFFERSON (1743–1826) Letter to John Adams, 1786

The happiness or unhappiness of men depends no less upon their dispositions than on their fortunes.
—FRANÇOIS DE LA ROCHEFOUCAULD (1613–1680) Maxims

Oh, how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes.
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) As You Like It, V, ii, 48

Happiness is the shadow of things past,
Which fools still take for that which is to be!
—FRANCIS THOMPSON (1859–1907) From the Night of Forebeing

The sun and stars that float in the open air;
The apple-shaped earth, and we upon it—surely the drift of them is something grand!
I do not know what it is, except that it is grand,
and that it is happiness.
—WALT WHITMAN (1819–1892) Carol of Occupations

Hatred

Now hatred is by far the greatest pleasure;
Men love in haste, but they detest at leisure.
—LORD BYRON (1788–1824) Don Juan

People hate those who make them feel their own inferiority.
—LORD CHESTERFIELD (1694–1773) Letters to His Son

There are glances of hatred that stab and raise no cry of murder.
—GEORGE ELIOT (1819–1880) Felix Holt

Whom men fear they hate, and whom they hate, they wish dead.
—QUINTUS ENNIUS (239–169 B.C.) Thyestes

How incredible it is that in this fragile existence we should hate and destroy one another. There are possibilities enough for all who will abandon mastery over others to pursue mastery over nature. There is world enough for all to seek their happiness in their own way.
—LYNDON B. JOHNSON (1908–1973) Inaugural Address, Jan. 1965

Men hate more steadily than they love.
—SAMUEL JOHNSON (1709–1784) Boswell's Life of Johnson

For never can true reconcilement grow,
Where wounds of deadly hate have pierced so deep.
—JOHN MILTON (1608–1674) Paradise Lost

There is no sport in hate when all the rage
Is on one side.
—PERCY B. SHELLEY (1792–1822) Lines to a Reviewer

It is characteristic of human nature to hate the man whom you have wronged.
—TACITUS (54–119) Agricola

As love, if love be perfect, casts out fear,
So hate, if hate be perfect, casts out fear.
—TENNYSON (1809–1892) Idylls of the King

Health

In nothing do men more nearly approach the gods than in giving health to men.
—CICERO (106–43 B.C.) Pro Ligario

The health of the people is really the foundation upon which all their happiness and all their powers as a State depend.
—BENJAMIN DISRAELI (1804–1881)

Health is not a condition of matter, but of Mind.
—Mary Baker G. Eddy (1821–1910) Science and Health

O health! health! the blessing of the rich! the riches of the poor! who can buy thee at too dear a rate, since there is no enjoying this world without thee?
—Ben Jonson (1572–1637) Volpone

Our prayers should be for a sound mind in a healthy body.
—Juvenal (47–138) Satires

Life is not merely being alive, but being well.
—Martial (c. A.D. 66) Epigrams

A man in good health is always full of advice to the sick.
—Menander (342–291 B.C.) Andria

It is part of the cure to wish to be cured.
—Seneca (8 B.C.–A.D. 65) Hippolytus

Measure your health by your sympathy with morning and spring. If there is no response in you to the awakening of nature, if the prospect of an early morning walk does not banish sleep, if the warble of the first bluebird does not thrill you, know that the morning and spring of your life are past, Thus may you feel your pulse.
—Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862) Early Spring in Massachusetts

Heart

My heart's in the Highlands, my heart is not here;
My heart's in the Highlands a-chasing the deer.
—Robert Burns (1759–1796)

Maid of Athens, ere we part,
Give, oh, give me back my heart!
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Maid of Athens

Faint heart never won fair lady.
—William Camden (1551–1623) Remains Concerning Britain

The heart has eyes that the brain knows nothing of.
—Dr. Charles Henry Parkhurst (1842–1933)

And let me wring your heart; for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, III, iv, 35

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve For daws to peck at.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Othello, I, i, 64

He hath a heart as sound as a bell and his tongue is the clapper, for what his heart thinks his tongue speaks.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Much Ado About Nothing, III, ii, 12

My heart is a lonely hunter that hunts on a lonely hill.
—William Sharp (1856?–1905) The Lonely Hunter

My true-love hath my heart, and I have his
By just exchange one for the other given
I hold his dear, and mine he cannot miss
There never was a better bargain driven.
—Sir Philip Sidney (1554–1586) The Bargain

Let not your heart be troubled.
—New Testament: John, xiv, 1

Heat See WEATHER

Heaven

All places are distant from heaven alike.
—Robert Burton (1577–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

To Appreciate heaven well
'Tis good for a man to have some fifteen minutes of hell.
—Will Carleton (1845–1912) Farm Ballads

And so upon this wise I prayed,— Great Spirit, give to me
A heaven not so large as yours
  But large enough for me.
—Emily Dickinson (1830–1886) A Prayer

I sent my soul through the invisible,
Some letter of that after-life to spell:
  And by and by my soul return'd to me,
And answer'd, "I myself am Heav'n and Hell."
—Edward Fitzgerald (1809–1883) tr.: Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám

All this, and Heaven too!
—Matthew Henry (1662–1714) Life of Philip Henry

What came from the earth returns back to the earth, and the spirit that was sent from heaven, again carried back, is received into the temple of heaven.
—Lucretius (96–55 B.C.) De Rerum Natura

Here we may reign secure; and in my choice
To reign is worth ambition, though in Hell:
Better to reign in Hell, than serve in Heav'n.
—John Milton (1608–1674) Paradise Lost

Heaven-gates are not so highly arch'd
As princes' palaces; they that enter there Must go upon their knees.
—John Webster (1580?–1625) The Duchess of Malfi

In my father's house are many mansions.
—New Testament: John, xiv, 2

Hell

Hell is full of good intentions or desires.
—St. Bernard of Clairvaux (1091–1153)

Here sighs, plaints, and voices of the deepest woe resounded through the starless sky. Strange languages, horrid cries, accents of grief and wrath, voices deep and hoarse, with hands clenched in despair, made a commotion which whirled forever through that air of everlasting gloom, even as sand when whirlwinds sweep the ground.
—Dante (1265–1321) Inferno, Canto iii

Abandon every hope, ye who enter here.
—Dante (1265–1321) Inferno, Canto iii [Inscription over the gate of Hell]

I found the original of my hell in the world which we inhabit.
—Dante (1265–1321)

Hell is a circle about the unbelieving.
—The Koran

Hell hath no limits, nor is circumscrib'd
In one self-place; for where we are is hell;
And where hell is, there must we ever be;
And to conclude, when all the world dissolves,
And every creature shall be purified,
All places shall be hell that are not heaven.
—Christopher Marlowe (1564–1593) Dr. Faustus

Myself am Hell;
And, in the lowest deep, a lower deep,
Still threat'ning to devour me, opens wide;
To which the hell I suffer seems a heaven.
—John Milton (1608–1674) Paradise Lost

Heroism

No man is a hero to his valet.
—Mlle. Aisse (1694?–1733) Letters

Heroism is the brilliant triumph of the soul over the flesh—that is to say, over fear. . . . Heroism is the dazzling and glorious concentration of courage.
—Henri-Frederic Amiel (1828–1881) Journal, October 1, 1849

Heroism feels and never reasons and therefore is always right.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Heroism

There is nothing more touching than the sight of a Nation in search of its great men, nothing more beautiful than its readiness to accept a hero on trust.
—James Russell Lowell (1819–1891) General McClellan's Report

History

The great object in trying to understand history is to get behind men and grasp ideas.
—Lord Acton (1834–1902) Letters to Mary Gladstone

Biography is the only true history.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) Journal, January 13, 1832

All history, so far as it is not supported by contemporary evidence, is romance.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Boswell's Tour to Hebrides

History is the witness of the times, the torch of truth, the life of memory, the teacher of life, the messenger of antiquity.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) De Oratore

History is clarified experience.
—James Russell Lowell (1819–1891) Books and Libraries

History repeats itself.
—Thucydides (471?–400? b.c.) History, Bk. i

Home

You are a King by your own Fireside, as much as any Monarch on his Throne.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

In love of home, the love of country has its rise.
—Charles Dickens (1812–1870) Old Curiosity Shop

Home is the place where, when you have to go there,
They have to take you in.
—Robert Frost (1875–1963) The Death of the Hired Man

Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home.
—John Howard Payne (1791–1852) Home Sweet Home

Home is where the heart is.
—Pliny the Elder (a.d. 23–79)

Weep no more, my lady;
Oh, weep no more today!
We will sing one song for the old Kentucky home,
For the old Kentucky home, far away.
—Stephen C. Foster (1812–1864) Old Folks At Home

It takes a heap o' livin' in a house t' make it home.
—Edgar A. Guest (1881–1959) Home

To be happy at home is the ultimate result of all ambition, the end to which every enterprise and labor tends, and of which every desire prompts the prosecution.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Rambler

When I was at home I was in a better place.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, II, iv, 14

As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xxvii, 8

Honesty

A trustee is held to something stricter than the morals of the market place. Not honesty alone, but the punctilio of an honor the most sensitive, is then the standard of behavior.
—Benjamin N. Cardozo (1870–1938)

Make yourself an honest man, and then you may be sure that there is one rascal less in the world.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881)

Honesty is the best policy.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

If he were
To be made honest by an act of parliament
I should not alter in my faith of him.
—Ben Jonson (1572–1637) Devil is an Ass

An honest man is the noblest work of God.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Man

You are underrating the President [Lincoln]. I grant that he lacks higher education and his manners are not in accord with European conceptions of the dignity of a chief magistrate. He is a well-developed child of nature and is not skilled in polite phrases and poses. But he is a man of profound feeling, correct and firm principles and incorruptible honesty. His motives are unquestionable, and he possesses to a remarkable degree the characteristic, God-given trait of this people, sound common sense.
—Carl Schurz (1829–1906) Letter, October, 1864

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats,
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Julius Caesar, IV, iii, 66

Honor

The best memorial for a mighty man is to gain honour ere death.
—Beowulf (8th C.)

Better a thousand times to die with glory than live without honor.
—Louis VI of France (1081–1137)

I could not love thee, dear, so much, Loved I not honor more.
—Richard Lovelace (1618–1658) To Lucasta, On Going to Wars

Set honour in one eye and death i' the other
And I will look on both indifferently;
For let the gods so speed me as I love
The name of honour more than I fear death.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Julius Caesar, I, ii, 86

Mine honour is my life; both grow in one;
Take honour from me and my life is done.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Richard II, I, i, 182

Hope

I live on hope and that I think do all Who come into this world.
—Robert Bridges (1844–1930) The Growth of Love

To the sick, while there is life there is hope.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) Epistolae Ad Atticum

Hope is itself a species of happiness, and, perhaps, the chief happiness which this world affords.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) in Boswell's Life of Johnson

The setting of a great hope is like the setting of the sun. The brightness of our life is gone.
—Henry W. Longfellow (1807–1882) Hyperion

Hopes are but the dreams of those who wake.
—Pindar (c. 522–442 B.C.) Fragment

Hope springs eternal in the human breast;
Man never is, but always to be blest.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Man

Hope, dead lives nevermore,
No, not in heaven.
—Christina Rossetti (1830–1894) Dead Hope

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Richard III, V, ii, 23

We did not dare to breathe a prayer
  Or to give our anguish scope!
Something was dead in each of us,
  And what was dead was hope.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) The Ballad of Reading Gaol

Hospitality

People are either born hosts or born guests.
—Max Beerbohm (1872–1956)

Hospitality consists in a little fire, a little food, and an immense quiet.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Journal

Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat,
  Or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
  And be a friend to man.
—Sam Walter Foss (1858–1911) House by the Side of the Road

Hail Guest! We ask not what thou art:
If Friend, we greet thee, hand and heart;
If Stranger, such no longer be;
If Foe, our love shall conquer thee.
—Arthur Guiterman (1871–1943) Old Welsh Door Verse

True friendship's laws are by this rule express'd, Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest.
—Homer (c. 10th–8th C. B.C.) The Odyssey

Fish and guests in three days are stale.
—John Lyly (1554?–1606) Euphues

When there is room in the heart there is room in the house.
—Danish proverb

I had three chairs in my house: one for solitude, two for friendship, three for society.
—Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862) Walden

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares.
—New Testament: Hebrews, xiii, 2

Humility

Lowliness is the base of every virtue,
And he who goes the lowest builds the safest.
—Philip J. Bailey (1816–1902) Festus

I ate umble pie with an appetite.
—Charles Dickens (1812–1870) David Copperfield

  True humility,
The highest virtue, mother of them all.
—Tennyson (1809–1892) Idylls of the King

Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.
—New Testament: Matthew, v, 39: Luke, vi, 29

Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.
—New Testament: Matthew, vi, 41

Hunger

Hunger is the best sauce in the world.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

An empty stomach is not a good political adviser.
—Albert Einstein (1879–1955) Cosmic Religion

They that die by famine die by inches.
—Matthew Henry (1662–1714) Commentaries

Death in all its shapes is hateful to unhappy man, but the worst is death from hunger.
—Homer (c. 10th–8th C. B.C.) Odyssey

If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat.
—Old Testament: Lamentations, iv, 9

Husband

We wedded men live in sorrow and care.
—Geoffrey Chaucer (1340?–1400) Merchant's Tale Prologue

It is necessary to be almost a genius to make a good husband.
—Honoré de Balzac (1799–1850) Physiology of Marriage

Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence: and likewise also the wife unto the husband.
—New Testament: I Corinthians, vii, 3

Idleness is only the refuge of weak minds, and the holiday of fools.
—Lord Chesterfield (1694–1773) Letters, July 20, 1749

Absence of occupation is not rest,
A mind quite vacant is a mind distress'd.
—William Cowper (1731–1800) Retirement

There is no place in civilization for the idler. None of us has any right to ease.
—Henry Ford (1863–1947)

Laziness travels so slowly that poverty soon overtakes him.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

To be idle and to be poor have always been reproaches, and therefore every man endeavors with his utmost care to hide his poverty from others, and his idleness from himself.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) The Idler

Of all our faults, the one that we excuse most easily is idleness.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

For Satan finds some mischief still For idle hands to do.
—Isaac Watts (1674–1748) Divine Songs

To do nothing at all is the most difficult thing in the world, the most difficult and the most intellectual.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) The Critic as Artist

Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, vi, 6

Ignorance

Ignorance is the night of the mind, but a night without moon or star.
—Confucius (c. 551–478 B.C.) Analects

To be conscious that you are ignorant is a great step to knowledge.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881) Sybil

To the ignorant even the words of the wise seem foolishness.
—Euripides (480–406 B.C.) The Bacchae

No more; where ignorance is bliss,
'Tis folly to be wise.
—Thomas Gray (1716–1771) On a Distant Prospect of Eton College

Ignorance of the law excuses no man: not that all can know the law, but because 'tis an excuse everyone will plead, and no man can tell how to refute him.
—John Selden (1584–1654) Table-Talk

There is no darkness, but ignorance.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Twelfth Night, IV, ii, 44

Imagination

Only in men's imagination does every truth find an effective and undeniable existence. Imagination, not invention, is the supreme master of art as of life.
—Joseph Conrad (1857–1924) A Personal Record

To know is nothing at all; to imagine is everything.
—Anatole France (1844–1924) The Crime of Sylvestre Bonnard

Were it not for imagination a man would be as happy in the arms of a chambermaid as of a duchess.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Boswell's Life of Johnson

His imagination resembled the wings of an ostrich. It enabled him to run, though not to soar.
—Thomas B. Macaulay (1800–1859) On John Dryden

The human race is governed by its imagination.
—Napoleon Bonaparte (1769–1821)

Imitation

Men often applaud an imitation, and hiss the real thing.
—Aesop (6th C. B.C.) The Buffoon and the Countryman

Imitation is the sincerest flattery.
—Charles C. Colton (1780?–1832)

He who imitates what is evil always goes beyond the example that is set; on the contrary, he who imitates what is good always falls short.
—Francesco Guicciardini (1483–1540) Story of Italy

Agesilaus, being invited once to hear a man who admirably imitated the nightingale, declined, saying he had heard the nightingale itself.
—Plutarch (46?–120?) Lives: Agesilaus

A great part of art consists in imitation. For the whole conduct of life is based on this: that what we admire in others we want to do ourselves.
—Quintilian (40–c. 100) De institutio Oratoria

Go, and do thou likewise.
—New Testament: Luke, x, 37

Immortality

Let us not lament too much the passing of our friends. They are not dead, but simply gone before us along the road which all must travel.
—Antiphanes (c. 360 B.C.) Fragment

After the resurrection of the body shall have taken place, being set free from the condition of time, we shall enjoy eternal life, with love ineffable and steadfastness without corruption.
—St. Augustine (354–430) Of the Faith and of the Creed

If I err in my belief that the souls of men are immortal, I err gladly, and I do not wish to lose so delightful an error.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Senectute

My humble friend, we know not how to live this life which is so short yet seek one that never ends.
—Anatole France (1844–1924) The Red Lily

Either the soul is immortal and we shall not die, or it perishes with the flesh, and we shall not know that we are dead. Live, then, as if you were eternal.
—André Maurois (1885–1967)

Indecision See decision

Independence See dependence

Indiscretion See discretion

Individualism

What another would have done as well as you, do not do it. What another would have said as well as you, do not say it; written as well, do not write it. Be faithful to that which exists nowhere but in yourself—and thus make yourself indispensable.
—André Gide (1869–1951) Fruits of the Earth

Whatever crushes individuality is despotism, by whatever name it may be called.
—John Stuart Mill (1806–1873) On Liberty

An individual is as superb as a nation when he has the qualities which make a superb nation.
—Walt Whitman (1819–1892) Leaves of Grass, preface

Jealousy

Anger and jealousy can no more bear to lose sight of their objects than love.
—George Eliot (1819–1880) The Mill on the Floss

Though jealousy be produced by love, as ashes are by fire, yet jealousy extinguishes love as ashes smother the flame.
—Margaret of Navarre (1492–1549) Heptameron

O! beware, my lord, of jealousy
It is the green-eyed monster which doth mock The meat it feeds on.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Othello, III, iii, 166

Love is strong as death; jealousy is cruel as the grave.
—Old Testament: Song of Solomon, viii, 6

Joy

Joy rises in me like a summer's morn.
—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834) Christmas Carol

My theory is to enjoy life, but the practice is against it.
—Charles Lamb (1775–1834)

My candle burns at both ends,
It will not last the night;
But ah, my foes, and oh, my friends,
It gives a lovely light!
—Edna St. Vincent Millay (1892–1951)

Drink and dance and laugh and lie,
Love the reeling midnight through,
For tomorrow we shall die!
(But, alas, we never do.)
—Dorothy Parker (1893–1968) The Flaw in Paganism

A joy that's shared is a joy made double.
—John Ray (1627?–1705) English Proverbs

Silence is the perfectest herald of joy:
I were but little happy if I could say how much.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Much Ado About Nothing, II, i, 317

I have drunken deep of joy,
And I will taste no other wine to-night.
—Percy B. Shelley (1792–1822) The Cenci

Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.
—Old Testament: Psalms, xxx, 5

Justice

Heaven gives long life to the just and the intelligent.
—Confucius (c. 551–478 B.C.) The Book of History

Justice is truth in action.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881) Speech, Feb. 11, 1851

He reminds me of the man who murdered both his parents, and then, when sentence was about to be pronounced, pleaded for mercy on the grounds that he was an orphan.
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865) attributed

Just as, in fact there can be no peace without order so there can be no order without justice. . . .
—Pope Pius XII (1876–1958) Address on Easter Sunday, 1939

Only the actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust.
—James Shirley (1596–1666) The Contention of Ajax and Ulysses

Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just,
And he but naked, though licked up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Henry VI, III, ii, 232

What's sauce for a goose is sauce for a gander.
—Jonathan Swift (1667–1745) Polite Conversation

Judging from the main portions of the history of the world, so far, justice is always in jeopardy.
—Walt Whitman (1819–1892) Democratic Vistas

He that ruleth over men must be just.
—Old Testament: Samuel, xxiii, 3

The spirit of just men made perfect.
—New Testament: Hebrews, xii, 23

Kindness

It is difficult to tell how much men's minds are conciliated by a kind manner and gentle speech.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Officiis

A kindness loses its grace by being noised abroad,
Who desires it to be remembered should forget it.
—Pierre Corneille (1606–1684) Theodore

It is a kindness to refuse gently what you intend to deny.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. B.C.) Sententiae

This was the unkindest cut of all.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Julius Caesar, III, ii, 187

Yet do I fear thy nature;
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Macbeth, I, v, 14

Knowledge

What one knows is, in youth, of little moment; they know enough who know how to learn.
—Henry Adams (1838–1918) Education of Henry Adams

Knowledge is, indeed, that which, next to virtue, truly and essentially raises one man above another.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719) The Guardian

I assure you I had rather excel others in the knowledge of what is excellent, than in the extent of my power and dominion.
—Alexander the Great (356–323 B.C.)

Knowledge is power.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) De Haeresibus

Knowledge is a comfortable and necessary retreat and shelter for us in an advanced age; and if we do not plant it while young, it will give us no shade when we grow old.
—Lord Chesterfield (1694–1773) Letters

No technical knowledge can outweigh knowledge of the humanities, in the gaining of which philosophy and history walk hand in hand. Our inheritance of well-founded slowly conceived codes of honor, morals and manners, the passionate convictions which so many hundreds of millions share together of the principles of freedom and justice, are far more precious to us than anything which scientific discoveries can bestow.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) Speech, March 31, 1949

It is the province of knowledge to speak, and it is the privilege of wisdom to listen.
—Oliver Wendell Holmes (1809–1894)

Knowledge is of two kinds. We know a subject ourselves or we know where we can find information upon it.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Boswell's Life of Johnson

To myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the sea-shore, and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble, or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me.
—Sir Isaac Newton (1642–1727)

Then I began to think, that it is very true which is commonly said, that the one-half of the world knoweth not how the other half liveth.
—François Rabelais (1494?–1553) Pantagruel

Ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) II Henry VI, IV, vii, 78

I do not know that knowledge amounts to anything more definite than a novel and grand surprise, or a sudden revelation of the insufficiency of all that we had called knowledge before; an indefinite sense of the grandeur and glory of the universe.
—Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862) Spring in Massachusetts

Labor

There is no right to strike against the public safety by anybody, anywhere, anytime.
—Calvin Coolidge (1872–1933) Letter to Samuel Gompers

Each needs the other: capital cannot do without labor, nor labor without capital.
—Pope Leo XIII (1810–1903) Rerum Novarum

Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
The emptiness of the ages in his face,
And on his back the burden of the world.
—Edwin Markham (1852–1940) Man With the Hoe

No business which depends for existence on paying less than living wages to its workers has any right to continue in this country.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) Public statement

I am a true labourer: I earn that I eat, get that I wear, owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness, glad of other men's good.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, III, ii, 78

There is no real wealth but the labor of man. Were the mountains of gold and the valleys of silver, the world would not be one grain of corn the richer; no one comfort would be added to the human race.
—Percy B. Shelley (1792–1822) Queen Mab, notes

The labourer is worthy of his hire.
—New Testament: Luke, x, 7

Let them be hewers of wood and drawers of water.
—Old Testament: Joshua, ix, 21

Language

You are worth as many men as you know languages.
—Charles V, Holy Roman Emperor (1500–1558)

In language clearness is everything.
—Confucius (c. 551–478 B.C.) Analects

A man who does not know foreign languages is ignorant of his own.
—Goethe (1749–1832) Sprüche in Prosa

There is no master key to the inner life of a people, but language unlocks a vast treasure house.
—Edgar Lee Hewett (1865–1946) Ancient Life in Mexico

Every language is a temple in which the soul of those who speak it is enshrined.
—Oliver Wendell Holmes (1809–1894)

Language is the dress of thought.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Lives of the Poets

The way to learn a language is to sit down and learn it.
—William Graham Sumner (1840–1910) Reminiscences

Language, as well as the faculty of speech, was the immediate gift of God.
—Noah Webster (1758–1843) American Dictionary, Preface

Language is not an abstract construction of the learned, or of dictionary makers, but it is something arising out of the work, needs, ties, joys, affections, tastes, of long generations of humanity, and has its bases broad and low, close to the ground.
—Walt Whitman (1819–1892) Slang in America

Laughter

God hath not granted to woeful mortals even laughter without tears.
—Callimachus (c. 260–240 B.C.) Fragments

You no doubt laugh in your sleeve.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Finibus

The loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind.
—Oliver Goldsmith (1730–1774) The Deserted Village

Laughter unquenchable arose among the blessed gods.
—Homer (c. 10th–8th C. B.C.) Iliad

I laugh because I must not cry.
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865)

He deserves Paradise who makes his companions laugh.
—Mohammed (570–632) The Koran

Everything gives cause for either laughter or tears.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) De Ira

The pleasantest laughter is at the expense of our enemies.
—Sophocles (495–406 B.C.) Ajax

Laughter is not a bad beginning for a friendship, and it is the best ending for one.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) The Picture of Dorian Gray

Woe unto you that laugh now! for ye shall mourn and weep.
—New Testament: Luke, vi, 25

As the crackling of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of a fool.
—Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, vii, 6

Law

Law is a pledge that the citizens of a state will do justice to one another.
—Aristotle (384–322 B.C.) Politics

The beginning of the law is benevolence, and with benevolence it ends.
—Babylonian Talmud: Sotah

The laws place the safety of all before the safety of individuals.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Finibus

Men would be great criminals did they need as many laws as they make.
—Charles John Darling (1849–1936) Scintillæ Juris

Time is the best interpreter of every doubtful law.
—Dionysius of Halicarnassus (d. c. 7 B.C.) Antiquities of Rome

Possession is nine points of the law.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) Holy War

In law a man is guilty when he violates the rights of another. In ethics he is guilty if he only thinks of doing so.
—Immanuel Kant (1724–1804) Lecture at Königsberg, 1775

The purpose of law is to prevent the strong from always having their way.
—Ovid (43 B.C.–A.D. 18?) Fasti

No man is above the law and no man is below it; nor do we ask any man's permission when we require him to obey it.
—Theodore Roosevelt (1858–1919) Message, Jan. 1904

Ye shall have one manner of law, as well for the stranger, as for one of your own country.
—Old Testament: Leviticus, xxiv, 22

Where is there any book of the law so clear to each man as that written in his heart?
—Leo Tolstoy (1828–1910) The Chinese Pilot

He that pleads his own cause has a fool for his client.
—English proverb

Leadership

I light my candle from their torches.
—Robert Burton (1577–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

And when we think we lead we most are led.
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) The Two Foscari

The final test of a leader is that he leaves behind him in other men the conviction and the will to carry on.
—Walter Lippmann (1889–1974) Roosevelt Has Gone

An two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Much Ado About Nothing, III, v, 40

Ill can he rule the great that cannot reach the small.
—Edmund Spenser (1552?–1599) The Faerie Queen

Reason and calm judgment, the qualities specially belonging to a leader.
—Tacitus (55–117) History

Learning

What one knows is, in youth, of little moment; they know enough who know how to learn.
—Henry Adams (1838–1918) Education of Henry Adams

All men by nature desire to know.
—Aristotle (384–322 B.C.)

That there should one man die ignorant who had capacity for knowledge, this I call tragedy.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881)

Wear your learning, like your watch, in a private pocket; and do not pull it out, and strike it, merely to show that you have one.
—Lord Chesterfield (1694–1773) Letters, February 22, 1748

A smattering of everything and a knowledge of nothing.
—Charles Dickens (1812–1870) Sketches by Boz

Education is a controlling grace to the young, consolation to the old, wealth to the poor, and ornament to the rich.
—Diogenes Laertius (2nd or 3rd C. A.D.)

You send your child to the schoolmaster, but 'tis the schoolboys who educate him.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Conduct of Life

If you have knowledge, let others light their candles at it.
—Margaret Fuller (1810–1850)

A child's education should begin at least one hundred years before he was born.
—Oliver Wendell Holmes (1809–1894)

The important thing is not so much that every child should be taught, as that every child should be given the wish to learn.
—Sir John Lubbock (1834–1913) Pleasures of Life

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring:
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) An Essay On Criticism

'Tis education forms the common mind:
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Moral Essays

I am glad to learn, in order that I may teach.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) Ad Lucilium

The great aim of education is not knowledge but action.
—Herbert Spencer (1820–1903)

There is no royal road to learning; no short cut to the acquirement of any valuable art.
—Anthony Trollope (1815–1882) Barchester Towers

Leisure

When a man's busy, why, leisure
Strikes him as wonderful pleasure;
'Faith, and at leisure once is he?
Straightway he wants to be busy.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) The Glove

It is the mark of a superior man that he will take no harmful ease.
—Confucius (c. 551–478 B.C.) Book of History

A life of leisure and a life of laziness are two things.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

Give time to your friends, leisure to your wife, relax your mind, give rest to your body, so that you may the better fulfil your accustomed occupation.
—Phaedrus (A.D. 1st C.) Fables

To be able to fill leisure intelligently is the last product of civilization.
—Bertrand Russell (1872–1970) The Conquest of Happiness

Liberty

Eternal spirit of the chainless mind!
Brightest in dungeons, Liberty! thou art.
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) The Prisoner of Chillon

The condition upon which God has given liberty to man is eternal vigilance.
—John Philpot Curran (1750–1817) Speech upon the Right of Election, July 10, 1790.

Those, who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Historical Review of Constitution and Government of Pennsylvania

Is Life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty, or give me death.
—Patrick Henry (1736–1799) Speech, 1775

The God who gave us life gave us liberty at the same time.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826) The Rights of British America

It is true that liberty is precious—so precious that it must be rationed.
—Nikolai Lenin (1870–1924)

The inescapable price of liberty is an ability to preserve it from destruction.
—General Douglas MacArthur (1880–1964) Speech

He that would make his own liberty secure must guard even his enemy from oppression.
—Thomas Paine (1737–1809) First Principles of Government

There is . . . no liberty but liberty under law. Law does not restrict liberty; it creates the only real liberty there is.
—William Sumner (1840–1910) The Forgotten Man

Life

Remember that man's life lies all within this present, as 't were but a hair's breadth of time; as for the rest, the past is gone, the future may never be. Short, therefore, is man's life, and narrow is the corner of the earth wherein he dwells.
—Marcus Aurelius (121–180) Meditations

Life is a test and this world a place of trial. Always the problems—or it may be the same problem—will be presented to every generation in different forms.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) Speech 1949

I have measured out my life with coffee spoons.
—T. S. Eliot (1888–1965) Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock

The fool, with all his other faults, has this also: he is always getting ready to live.
—Epicurus (342–270 B.C.) Fragments

Were it offered to my choice, I should have no objection to a repetition of the same life from its beginnings, only asking the advantages authors have in a second edition to correct some faults.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Autobiography

There is more to life than increasing its speed.
—Mohandas Gandhi (1869–1948)

I wish to preach, not the doctrine of ignoble ease, but the doctrine of the strenuous life.
—Theodore Roosevelt (1858–1919) Speech

Life is neither a good nor an evil; it is simply the place where good and evil exist.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) Epistulae ad Lucilium

Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale, Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) King John, III, iv, 108

One man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, II, vii, 142

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) All's Well That Ends Well, IV, iii, 83

As for man, his days are as grass: as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth.
—Old Testament: Psalms, viii, 15

The mass of men lead lives of quiet desperation.
—Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862) Walden

Love

I have never loved anyone for love's sake, except, perhaps, Josephine—a little.
—Napoleon Bonaparte (1769–1821)

How do I love thee? Let me count the ways.
I love thee with a love I seemed to lose
With my lost saints, —I love thee with the breath,
Smiles, tears, of all my life!—, if God choose,
I shall but love thee better after death.
—Elizabeth B. Browning (1806–1861) Sonnets from the Portuguese

God be thanked, the meanest of his creatures Boasts two soul-sides, one to face the world with,
One to show a woman when he loves her.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) One Word More

Oh my luve's like a red, red, rose,
That's newly sprung in June;
Oh my luve's like the melodie That's sweetly played in tune.
—Robert Burns (1759–1796) Red, Red Rose

To see her is to love her,
And love but her forever;
For nature made her what she is,
And never made anither!
—Robert Burns (1759–1796) Bonny Lesley

Alas! the love of women! it is known To be a lovely and a fearful thing.
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Don Juan

Let Time and Chance combine, combine!
Let Time and Chance combine!
The fairest love from heaven above,
That love of yours was mine,
My Dear!
That love of yours was mine.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) Adieu

Love and war are the same thing, and stratagems and policy are as allowable in the one as in the other.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

If love be good, from whennes comth my wo?
—Geoffrey Chaucer (1340?–1400) Troilus and Criseyde

The Stoics define love as the endeavor to form a friendship inspired by beauty.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) Tusculanae Disputationes

When povertie comes in at doores, love leaps out at windowes.
—John Clark (1609–1676) Paroemiologia

Love's but a frailty of the mind,
When 'tis not with ambition joined:
A sickly flame, which, if not fed, expires,
And feeding, wastes in self-consuming fires.
—William Congreve (1670–1729) Way of the World

Say what you will, 'tis better to be left Than never to have loved.
—William Congreve (1670–1729) Way of the World

We are all born for love. . . . It is the principle of existence and its only end.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881) Sybil

Men and women call one another inconstant, and accuse one another of having changed their minds, when, God knows, they have but changed the object of their eye, and seen a better white or red.
—John Donne (1572–1631) Sermons

Last night, ah, yesternight, betwixt her lips and mine
There fell thy shadow, Cynara! Thy breath was shed Upon my soul between the kisses and the wine;
And I was desolate and sick of an old passion,
Yea, I was desolate and bowed my head:
I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion.
—Ernest Dowson (1867–1900) Cynara

But you must believe me when I tell you that I have found it impossible to carry the heavy burden of responsibility and to discharge my duties as King as I would wish to do without the help and support of the woman I love.
—Edward VIII (1894–1972) Abdication Speech

All mankind love a lover.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Essays

He is not a lover who does not love forever.
—Euripides (480–406 B.C.) Troades

Perhaps they were right in putting love into books . . .
Perhaps it could not live anywhere else.
—William Faulkner (1897–1962) Light in August

Love grants in a moment
What toil can hardly achieve in an age.
—Goethe (1749–1832) Torquato Tasso

Ah! What is love? It is a pretty thing,
As sweet unto a shepherd as a king,
And sweeter too;
For kings have cares that wait upon a crown,
And cares can make the sweetest love to frown.
—Robert Greene (1560?–1592) Shepherd's Wife

To demand of love that it be without jealousy is to ask of light that it cast no shadows.
—Oscar Hammling (1890–) Laconics

If you would be loved, love.
—Hecato (c. 550–476 B.C.) Fragments

At thy command I would change, not merely my costume, but my very soul, so entirely art thou the sole possessor of my body and my spirit. Never, God is my witness, never have I sought anything in thee but thyself; I have sought thee, and not thy gifts. I have not looked to the marriage-bond or dowry.
—Héloise (1101–1164) to Abelard

Love in a hut, with water and a crust,
Is—love, forgive us!—cinders, ashes, dust.
—John Keats (1795–1821) Lamia

Come live with me and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove,
That valleys, groves, or hills, or fields,
Or woods and steepy mountains yields.
—Christopher Marlowe (1564–1593) Passionate Shepherd to his Love

If I were a king, ah love, if I were a king!
What tributary nations I would bring
To stoop before your sceptre and to swear Allegiance to your lips and eyes and hair.
—Justin Huntly McCarthy (1861–1936) If I Were King

'Tis not love's going hurts my days,
But that it went in little ways.
—Edna St. Vincent Millay (1892–1951) Spring and Fall

Take love away from life and you take away its pleasures.
—Molière (1622–1673) Bourgeois Gentleman

'Tis sweet to think, that, where'er we rove,
We are sure to find something blissful and dear;
And when we're far from the lips we love,
We've but to make love to the lips we are near.
—Thomas Moore (1779–1852) 'Tis Sweet to Think

But there's nothing half so sweet in life
As love's young dream.
—Thomas Moore (1779–1852) Love's Young Dream

Love that comes late oft claims a heavy toll.
—Sextus Propertius (50?–15 B.C.) Elegies

If all the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee, and be thy love.
—Sir Walter Raleigh (1552?–1618)

The pleasure of love is in loving; and we are much happier in the passion we feel than in that which we inspire.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Maxims

If thou remember'st not the slightest folly
That ever love did make thee run into,
Thou hast not lov'd.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, II, iv, 34

No sooner met but they looked, no sooner looked but they loved, no sooner loved but they sighed, no sooner sighed but they asked one another the reason.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, V, ii, 36

Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear;
When little fears grow great, great love grows there.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, III, ii, 188

But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Merchant of Venice, II, vi, 344

Ay me! for aught that I ever could read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Midsummer Night's Dream, I, i, 132

Speak low, if you speak love.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Much Ado About Nothing, II, i, 102

There is no creature loves me,
And if I die, no soul shall pity me.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Richard III, V, iii, 200

For stony limits cannot hold love out,
And what love can do that dares love attempt.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Romeo and Juliet, II, ii, 67

Give me my Romeo; and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Romeo and Juliet, III, ii, 21

Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Sonnet CXVI.

Common as light is love,
And its familiar voice wearies not ever,
Like the wide heaven, the all-sustaining air,
It makes the reptile equal to the god.
—Percy B. Shelley (1792–1822) Prometheus Unbound

Love is a symbol of eternity. It wipes out all sense of time, destroying all memory of a beginning and all fear of an end.
—Madame de Staël (1766–1817) Corinne

And blessings on the falling out
That all the more endears,
When we fall out with those we love,
And kiss again with tears.
—Tennyson (1809–1892) The Princess

To say that you can love one person all your life is just like saying that one candle will continue burning as long as you live.
—Leo Tolstoy (1828–1910) Kreutzer Sonata

Yet each man kills the thing he loves,
By each let this be heard,
Some do it with a bitter look,
Some with a flattering word,
The coward does it with a kiss,
The brave man with a sword.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) Ballad of Reading Gaol

Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.
—New Testament: Hebrews, xii, 6

Who love too much, hate in the like extreme.
—Homer (c. 10th–8th C. B.C.) Odyssey

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.
—New Testament: John, xv, 13

There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear.
—New Testament: I John, iv, 8

Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.
—Old Testament: Ruth, i, 16

Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it.
—Old Testament: Songs of Solomon, viii, 7

Luxury

Luxury and avarice—these pests have been the ruin of every state.
—Cato (234–149 B.C.) In support of the Oppian Law

Faint-hearted men are the fruit of luxurious countries. The same soil never produces both luxuries and heroes.
—Herodotus (484–424 B.C.) History

Fell luxury! more perilous to youth
Than storms or quicksands, poverty, or chains
—Hannah More (1745–1833) Belshazzar

People have declaimed against luxury for 2000 years, in verse and in prose, and people have always delighted in it.
—Voltaire (1694–1778) Philosophical Dictionary

On the soft beds of luxury most kingdoms have expired.
—Edward Young (1683–1765) Centaur

Majority and Minority

The oppression of a majority is detestable and odious: the oppression of a minority is only by one degree less detestable and odious.
—William Ewart Gladstone (1809–1898) Speech

It is my principle that the will of the majority should always prevail.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826) Letter to James Madison

One, of God's side, is a majority.
—Wendell Phillips (1811–1884) Speech on John Brown

Malice

Malice is cunning.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Natura Deorum

Malice hath a strong memory.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) Pisgah Sight

With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in.
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865) Second Inaugural Address

Man

This Being of mine, whatever it really is, consists of a little flesh, a little breath and the ruling Reason.
—Marcus Aurelius (121–180) Meditations

No man is an Iland, intire of it selfe; everyman is a piece of the Continent, a part of the maine, if a Clod bee washed away by the Sea, Europe is the lesse, as well as if a Promontorie were, as well as if a Mannor of thy friends or of thine owne were; any mans death diminishes me, because I am involved in Mankinde; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee.
—John Donne (1572–1631) Devotions

Man is a fallen god who remembers the heavens.
—Alphonse de Lamartine (1790–1869) Meditations

He's not the finest character that ever lived. But he's a human being, and a terrible thing is happening to him. So attention must be paid. He's not to be allowed to fall into his grave like an old dog.
—Arthur Miller (1915–) Death of a Salesman

Man is a rope stretched between the animal and the superman—a rope over an abyss.
—Friedrich W. Nietzsche (1844–1900) Thus Spake Zarathustra

What a chimera, then, is man! What a novelty! What a monster, what a chaos, what a contradiction, what a prodigy! Judge of all things, feeble worm of the earth, depositary of truth, a sink of uncertainty and error, the glory and the shame of the universe.
—Blaise Pascal (1623–1662) Pensées

Placed on this isthmus of a middle state
A being darkly wise and rudely great Created half to rise and half to fall
Great lord of all things, yet prey to all.
Sole judge of truth in endless error hurled,
The glory, jest and riddle of the world.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Man

What a piece of work is a man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And, yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me: no, nor woman neither, though by your smiling, you seem to say so.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, II, 2, 313

Man's capacities have never been measured; nor are we to judge of what he can do by any precedents, so little has been tried.
—Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862) Walden

Man is the only animal that blushes. Or needs to.
—Mark Twain (1835–1910) Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar

Who shall enumerate the many ways in which that costly piece of fixed capital, a human being, may be employed! More of him is wanted everywhere! Hunt, then, for some situation in which your humanity may be used.
—Albert Schweitzer (1875–1965) Civilization and Ethics

He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, I, ii, 187

How beauteous mankind is! O brave new world,
That has such people in 't!
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) The Tempest, V, i, 183

Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels.
—Old Testament: Psalms, viii, 5

Marriage

He that hath a wife and children hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1626) Marriage and Single Life

Cursed be the man, the poorest wretch in life,
The crouching vessel, to the tyrant wife,
Who has no will but her high permission;
Who has not sixpence but in her possession;
Who must to her his dear friend's secret tell;
Who dreads a curtain lecture worse than hell.
Were such the wife had fallen to my part,
I'd break her spirit or I'd break her heart.
—Robert Burns (1759–1796) Henpecked Husband

Marriage and hanging go by destiny; matches are made in heaven.
—Robert Burton (1577–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

The first bond of society is marriage; the next, our children; then the whole family and all things in common.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Officiis

Like blood, like goods, and like age,
Make the happiest marriage.
—John Clarke (1609–1676) Paroemiologia

Thus grief still treads upon the heels of pleasure, Marry'd in haste, we may repent at leisure.
—William Congreve (1670–1729) Old Bachelor

Happy and thrice happy are they who enjoy an uninterrupted union, and whose love, unbroken by any complaints, shall not dissolve until the last day.
—Horace (65–8 B.C.) Carmina

Marriages are made in heaven.
—Midrash: Genesis Rabbah, lxviii

Hail, wedded love, mysterious law; true source Of human offspring.
—John Milton (1608–1674) Paradise Lost

If you would marry wisely, marry your equal.
—Ovid (43 B.C.–A.D. 18?) Heroides

All happy families resemble one another; every unhappy family is unhappy in its own fashion.
—Leo Tolstoy (1828–1910) Anna Karenina

When a man marries again it is because he adored his first wife.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) Picture of Dorian Gray

Memory

To be ignorant of what happened before you were born is to be ever a child. For what is man's lifetime unless the memory of past events is woven with those of earlier times.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Oratore

There is no greater sorrow than to recall, in misery, the time when we were happy.
—Dante (1265–1321) Inferno

Memory is the treasure-house of the mind.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) The Holy State: Memory

A retentive memory is a good thing, but the ability to forget is the true token of greatness.
—Elbert Hubbard (1856–1915) Epigrams

The leaves lie thick upon the way Of Memories.
—James Joyce (1882–1941) Chamber Music

Better by far you should forget and smile,
Than that you should remember and be sad.
—Christina Rossetti (1830–1894) A Birthday

Things that were hard to bear are sweet to remember.
—Seneca (4? B.C.–A.D. 65) Hercules Furens

Hamlet: Methinks I see my father.
Horatio: O! Where, my lord?
Hamlet: In my mind's eye, Horatio.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, I, ii, 184

Remember thee!
Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat
In this distracted globe. Remember thee!
Yea, from the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all trivial fond records.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Hamlet, I, v, 97

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And old woes new wail my dear time's waste.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Sonnets, xxx

I shall remember while the light lives yet,
And in the night-time I shall not forget.
—Algernon Charles Swinburne (1837–1909) Erotion

Mercy

The quality of mercy is not strain'd
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice blest;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes;
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown;
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this sceptred sway;
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly power doth show likest God's When mercy seasons justice.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Merchant of Venice, IV, i, 184

Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.
—New Testament: Matthew, v, 7

What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.
—Old Testament: Micah, iv, 4

Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other.
—Old Testament: Psalms, lxxxv, 10

To hide the fault I see:
That mercy I to others show
That mercy show to me.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Universal Prayer

Months

Pale January lay
In its cradle day by day,
Dead or living, hard to say.
—Alfred Austin (1835–1913) Primroses

That blasts of January
Would blow you through and through.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Winter's Tale, IV, iv, 3

Late February days; and now, at last,
Might you have thought that Winter's woe was past;
So fair the sky and so soft the air.
—William Morris (1834–1896) Earthly Paradise

Menallo: I would chuse March, for I would come in like a Lion.
Tony: But you'd go out like a Lamb when you went to hanging.
—John Fletcher (1579–1625) Wife for a Month

April is the cruelest month, breeding Lilacs out of the dead land, mixing Memory and desire, stirring Dull roots with spring rain.
—T. S. Eliot (1888–1965) The Waste Land

Oh, to be in England
Now that April's here.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Home Thoughts

He has a hard heart who does not love in May.
—Guillaume de Lorris (d. c. 1235) Roman de la Rose

And what is so rare as a day in June?
Then, if ever, come perfect days;
Then Heaven tries earth if it be in tune,
And over it softly her warm ear lays.
—James Russell Lowell (1819–1891) Vision of Sir Launfa

The Summer looks out from her brazen tower,
Through the flashing bars of July.
—Francis Thompson (1859–1907) Corymbus for Autumn

Hot July brings cooling showers, Apricots and gillyflowers.
—Sara Coleridge (1802–1852) Pretty Lessons in Verse

Never return in August to what you love;
Along the leaves will rust
And over the hedges dust,
And in the air vague thunder and silence burning . . .
Choose some happier time for your returning.
—Bernice Lesbia Kenyon (1897–) Return

I'm not a chicken; I have seen Full many a chill September.
—Oliver Wendell Holmes (1809–1894) September Gale

The skies they were ashen and sober;
The leaves they were crisp and sere—
The leaves they were withering and sere;
It was night in the lonesome October
Of my most immemorial year.
—Edgar Allan Poe (1809–1849) Ulalume

When chill November's surly blast Made fields and forests bare.
—Robert Burns (1759–1796) Man Was Made to Mourn

In a drear-nighted December, Too happy, happy brook,
Thy bubblings ne'er remember Apollo's summer look;
But with a sweet forgetting,
They stay their crystal fretting,
Never, never petting
About the frozen time.
—John Keats (1795–1821) Stanzas

When we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December, how
In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Cymbeline, III, iii, 36

Music

Music, the greatest good that mortals know,
And all of heaven we have below.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719) Song for St. Cecilia's Day

Music exalts each joy, allays each grief,
Expels diseases, softens every pain,
Subdues the rage of poison, and the plague.
—John Armstrong (1709–1779) Preserving Health

Who hears music, feels his solitude Peopled at once.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Balaustion's Adventure

Music is well said to be the speech of angels.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) Essays: The Opera

Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast,
To soften rocks, or bend a knotted oak.
—William Congreve (1670–1729) The Mourning Bride

Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard Are sweeter: therefore, ye soft pipes, play on;
Not to the sensual ear, but, more endear'd,
Pipe to the spirit ditties of no tone.
—John Keats (1795–1821) Ode to a Grecian Urn

Nation

How much more are men than nations!
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Letters and Social Aims

It is because nations tend to stupidity and baseness that mankind moves so slowly; it is because individuals have a capacity for better things that it moves at all.
—George Gissing (1857–1903) Private Papers of Henry Ryecroft

The first panacea for a mismanaged nation is inflation of the currency; the second is war. Both bring a temporary prosperity; both bring a permanent ruin. But both are the refuge of political and economic opportunists.
—Ernest Hemingway (1898–1961) Notes on the Next War

There is no such thing as a little country. The greatness of a people is no more determined by their number than the greatness of a man is determined by his height.
—Victor Hugo (1802–1885)

The political life of a nation is only the most superficial aspect of its being. In order to know its inner life, the source of its action, one must penetrate to its soul by literature, philosophy and the arts, where are reflected the ideas, the passions, the dreams of a whole people.
—Romain Rolland (1866–1945) Musicians of the Past

That nation is worthless which does not joyfully stake everything in defense of her honor.
—Schiller (1759–1805) Maid of Orleans

It is a maxim founded on the universal experience of mankind that no nation is to be trusted farther than it is bound by its interest.
—George Washington (1732–1799) Letter to Congress, 1778

No nation is fit to sit in judgment upon any other nation.
—Woodrow Wilson (1856–1924)

And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth.
—New Testament: Acts, xvii, 26

A little one shall be come a thousand and a small one a strong nation.
—Old Testament: Isaiah, ix, 22

Nature

The study of Nature is intercourse with the Highest Mind. You should never trifle with Nature.
—Jean Louis Agassiz (1807–1873) Agassiz at Penikese

Believe one who knows: you will find something greater in woods than in books. Trees and stones will teach you that which you can never learn from masters.
—St. Bernard of Clairvaux (1091–1153) Epistles

Whatever befalls in accordance with Nature shall be accounted good.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) De Senectute

Nor rural sounds alone, but rural sounds, Exhilarate the spirit, and restore
The tone of languid Nature.
—William Cowper (1731–1800) The Task

Hast thou named all the birds without a gun;
Loved the wood-rose, and left it on its stalk?
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Forbearance

Never does Nature say one thing and Wisdom another.
—Juvenal (c. 60–130 a.d.) Satires

So Nature deals with us, and takes away
Our playthings one by one, and by the hand Leads us to rest.
—Henry W. Longfellow (1807–1882) Nature

All that thy seasons, O Nature, bring is fruit for me!
All things come from thee, subsist in thee, go back to thee.
—Marcus Aurelius (121–180) Meditations

In those vernal seasons of the year, when the air is calm and pleasant, it were an injury and sullenness against Nature not to go out and see her riches and partake in her rejoicing with heaven and earth.
—John Milton (1608–1674) Tractate of Education

The perfections of Nature show that she is the image of God; her defects show that she is only his image.
—Blaise Pascal (1623–1662) Pensées

All Nature is but Art, unknown to thee;
All Chance, Direction, which thou canst not see.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Man

Nature abhors a vacuum.
—François Rabelais (1494?–1553) Gargantua

And this our life, exempt from public haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in everything.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) As You Like It, II, i, 15

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Troilus and Cressida, III, iii, 175

I inhale great draughts of space,
The east and the west are mine, and the north and the south are mine.
I am larger than I thought,
I did not know I held so much goodness.
—Walt Whitman (1819–1892) Song of the Open Road

Neighbor

Reprove thy neighbor before thou threaten.
—Ben Sira (c. 190 b.c.) Book of Wisdom

You must ask your neighbour if you shall live in peace.
—John Clark (1609–1676) Paroemiologia

Good fences make good neighbors.
—Robert Frost (1875–1963) Mending Wall

Love your neighbor, yet pull not down your hedge.
—George Herbert (1593–1633) Jacula Prudentum

A bad neighbor is as great a plague as a good one is a blessing; he who enjoys a good neighbor has a precious possession.
—Hesiod (c. 735 b.c.) Works and Days

There is an idea abroad among moral people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good: myself. But my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make him happy—if I may.
—R. L. Stevenson (1850–1894) A Christmas Sermon

Love thy neighbour as thyself.
—New Testament: Matthew, xix, 19

Better is a neighbour that is near than a brother far off.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xxvii, 10

Night

I linger yet with Nature, for the night
Hath been to me a more familiar face
Than that of man; and in her starry shade
Of dim and solitary loveliness
I learn'd the language of another world.
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Manfred, III, iv

The night . . . giveth truce to all labours, and by sleeping maketh sweet all pains and travail.
—William Caxton (1422?–1491) Eneydos

Dark was the night as pich, or as the cole.
—Geoffrey Chaucer (1340?–1400) Canterbury Tales

Every evening we are poorer by a day.
—Arthur Schopenhauer (1788–1860)

Come, seeling night,
Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day;
And with thy bloody and invisible hand
Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond Which keeps me pale.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Macbeth, III, ii, 46

In the night there is peace for the old and hope for the young.
—George Bernard Shaw (1856–1950) Heartbreak House

Press close, bare-bosom'd night—press close, magnetic nourishing night!
Night of south winds—night of the large few stars!
Still nodding night—mad naked summernight.
—Walt Whitman (1819–1882) Song of Myself

The night cometh when no man can work.
—New Testament: John, ix, 4

Watchman, what of the night?
—Old Testament: Isaiah, xxi, ii

Nobility

The nobleman is he whose noble mind
Is filled with inborn worth, unborrowed from his kind.
—Geoffrey Chaucer (1340?–1400) Canterbury Tales

Send your noble Blood to Market, and see what it will buy.
—Thomas Fuller (1608–1681) Gnomologia

To live as one likes is plebeian; the noble man aspires to order and law.
—Goethe (1749–1832)

Hereditary nobility is due to the presumption that we shall do well because our fathers have done well.
—Joseph Joubert (1754–1824) Pensées

Noblesse oblige.
—Francois Gaston de Lévis (1720–1787) Maxims

True nobility is exempt from fear.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) II Henry VI, IV, i, 129

There is
One great society alone on earth;
The Noble Living and the Noble Dead.
—William Wordsworth (1770–1850) Prelude

Oath

An oath sworn with the clear understanding in one's mind that it should be performed must be kept.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) De Officiis

A liar is always prodigal with oaths.
—Pierre Corneille (1606–1684) The Liar

We mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826) Declaration of Independence

Ease would recant
Vows made in pain, as violent and void.
—John Milton (1608–1674) Paradise Lost

'Tis not the many oaths that make the truth,
But the plain single vow that is vow'd true.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) All's Well that Ends Well, IV, ii, 21

I write a woman's oaths in water.
—Sophocles (b.c. 495–406) Fragment

Obedience

The fear of some divine and supreme power keeps men in obedience.
—Robert Burton (1577–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

All arts his own, the hungry Greekling counts;
And bid him mount the skies, the skies he mounts.
—Juvenal (c. 60–130) Satires

Obedience,
Bane of all genius, virtue, freedom, truth,
Makes slaves of men, and, of the human frame,
A mechanized automaton.
—Percy B. Shelley (1792–1822) Queen Mab

Learn to obey before you command.
—Solon (638–559 b.c.)

Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die.
—Tennyson (1809–1892) Charge of the Light Brigade

Obediènce is the courtesy due to kings.
—Tennyson (1809–1892) Idylls of the King

We ought to obey God rather than men.
—New Testament: Acts, v, 29

Opinion

The man who never alters his opinion is like standing water, and breeds reptiles of the mind.
—William Blake (1757–1827) Proverbs of Hell

He that complies against his will Is of his own opinion still.
—Samuel Butler (1612–1680) Hudibras

No well-informed person has declared a change of opinion to be inconstancy.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) Ad Atticum

The only sin which we never forgive in each other is difference of opinion.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Society and Solitude

Men will die for an opinion as soon as for anything else.
—William Hazlitt (1778–1830) Characteristics

With effervescing opinions, as with the not yet forgotten champagne, the quickest way to let them get flat is to let them get exposed to the air.
—Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes (1841–1935) Opinion

For a thousand heads, a thousand tastes.
—Horace (65–8 b.c.) Satires

The foolish and dead alone never change their opinion.
—James Russell Lowell (1819–1891) My Study Windows

You are young, my son, and as the years go by, time will change, and even reverse many of your present opinions. Refrain therefore, awhile from setting yourself up as a judge of the highest matters.
—Plato (428–347 b.c.) Laws

Some praise at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the last opinion right.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Criticism

A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Troilus and Cressida, III, iii, 268

It were not best that we should all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horse-races.
—Mark Twain (1835–1910) Pudd'nhead Wilson's Calendar

Public opinion is stronger than the legislature, and nearly as strong as the Ten Commandments.
—Charles D. Warner (1829–1900) My Summer in a Garden

Opportunity

A wise man makes more opportunities than he finds.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620)

When one door is shut, another opens.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

He who seizes the (right) moment is the right man.
—Goethe (1749–1832) Faust

I knock unbidden once at every gate!
If sleeping, wake; if feasting, rise before I turn away. It is the hour of fate.
—John James Ingalls (1833–1900) Opportunity

Four things come not back:
The spoken word; The sped arrow;
Time past; The neglected opportunity.
—Omar Ibn (c. 581–644) Sayings

O Opportunity, thy guilt is great!
'Tis thou that execut'st the traitor's treason;
Thou set'st the wolf where he the lamb may get;
Whoever plots the sin, thou point'st the season.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) The Rape of Lucrece

Optimism

Optimism. The doctrine or belief that everything is beautiful, including what is ugly.
—Ambrose Bierce (1842–1914?) Devil's Dictionary

God's in his Heaven—All's right with the world!
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Pippa Passes

A man that could look no way but downwards with a muckrake in his hand.
—John Bunyan (1628–1688) Pilgrim's Progress

The optimist proclaims that we live in the best of all possible worlds; and the pessimist fears this is true.
—James Branch Cabell (1879–1958) Silver Stallion

An optimist is a guy that has never had much experience.
—Don Marquis (1878–1937) Maxims of Archy

The refuge from pessimism is the good men and women existing at any time in the world—they keep faith and happiness alive.
—Charles E. Norton (1827–1908)

All is for the best in the best of all possible worlds.
—Voltaire (1694–1778) Candide

Oratory

He can best be described as one of those orators who, before they get up, do not know what they are going to say; when they are speaking, do not know what they are saying; and, when they have sat down, do not know what they have said.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965)

When his words fell soft as snowflakes on a winter's day, then could no mortal man beside vie with Odysseus.
—Homer (c. 10th–8th C. B.C.) Iliad

Oratory is the power of beating down your adversary's arguments, and putting better in their place.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Boswell's Life of Johnson

Fear not, my lord, I'll play the orator
As if the golden fee for which I plead Were for myself.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Richard III, III, v, 95

It is not the powerful arm,
But soft enchanting tongue that governs all.
—Sophocles (495–406 B.C.) Philoctetes

If ever a woman feels proud of her lover, it is when she sees him as a successful public speaker.
—Harriet Beecher Stowe (1811–1896)

Order

Order means light and peace, inward liberty and free command over oneself; order is power.
—Henri-Frédéric Amiel (1828–1881) Journal

Order is Heav'ns first law.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Man

A place for everything and everything in its place.
—Samuel Smiles (1812–1904) Thrift

Order governs the world. The Devil is the author of confusion.
—Jonathan Swift (1667–1745) Letter to Stella

Have a place for everything and keep the thing somewhere else. This is not advice, it is merely custom.
—Mark Twain (1835–1910) Diaries

Let all things be done decently and in order.
—New Testament: I Corinthians, xiv, 40

Pain

Pleasure must succeed to pleasure, else past pleasure turns to pain.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) La Saisiaz

Real pain can alone cure us of imaginary ills.
—Jonathan Edwards (1703–1757) Resolutions

He has seen but half the universe who never has been shewn the house of Pain.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882)

The gods have so spun the thread for wretched mortals that they must live in pain.
—Homer (c. 10th–8th C. B.C.) Iliad

Those who do not feel pain seldom think that it is felt.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) The Rambler

There is a certain pleasure which is akin to pain.
—Metrodorus (f. 168 B.C.)

Pain is perfect misery, the worst of evils,
And excessive, overturns all patience.
—JOHN MILTON (1608–1674) Paradise Lost

Ay, but I fear you speak upon the rack,
Where men enforced do speak anything.
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Merchant of Venice, III, ii, 32

Paradise

A book of Verses underneath the Bough,
A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread—and Thou Beside me singing in the Wilderness—
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!
—EDWARD FITZGERALD (1809–1883) Rubaiyat

Man and Woman may only enter Paradise hand in hand. Together, the myth tells us, they left it and together must they return.
—RICHARD GARNETT (1835–1906) De Flagello Myrteo

Paradise is a dwelling place promised the faithful.
—MOHAMMED (570–632) The Koran

The loves that meet in Paradise shall cast out fear,
And Paradise hath room for you and me and all.
—CHRISTINA ROSSETTI (1830–1894) Saints and Angels

Parents

Reverence for parents—this standeth written third among the statutes of Justice to whom supreme honor is due.
—AESCHYLUS (525–456 B.C.) Suppliants

There are three degrees of filial piety. The highest is being a credit to our parents, the second is not disgracing them; the lowest is being able simply to support them.
—CONFUCIUS (c. 551–478 B.C.) Book of Rites

It used to be believed that the parent had unlimited claims on the child and rights over him. In a truer view of the matter, we are coming to see that the rights are on the side of the child and the duties on the side of the parent.
—WILLIAM G. SUMNER (1840–1910) Forgotten Man's Almanac

He argued that the principal duty which a parent owed to a child was to make him happy.
—ANTHONY TROLLOPE (1815–1882) Doctor Thorne

Children begin by loving their parents; as they grow older they judge them; sometimes they forgive them.
—OSCAR WILDE (1854–1900) Dorian Gray

Honour thy father and mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.
—OLD TESTAMENT: Exodus, XX, 12

Parting

Go from me. Yet I feel that I shall stand Henceforward in thy shadow.
—ELIZABETH B. BROWNING (1806–1861) Sonnets from Portuguese

Parting is all we know of heaven,
And all we need of hell.
—EMILY DICKINSON (1830–1886) Poems

They who go
Feel not the pain of parting; it is they Who stay behind that suffer.
—HENRY W. LONGFELLOW (1807–1882) Michael Angelo

Good night! Good night! parting is such sweet sorrow
That I shall say good night till it be morrow.
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Romeo and Juliet, II, ii, 185

Past

Think only of the past as its remembrance gives you pleasure.
—JANE AUSTEN (1775–1817) Pride and Prejudice

I have small patience with the antiquarian habit which magnifies the past and belittles the present. . . . Change is inevitable, at once a penalty and a privilege.
—JOHN BUCHAN (1875–1940) Memory Hold-the-Door

He seems To have seen better days, as who has not
Who has seen yesterday?
—LORD BYRON (1788–1824) Age of Bronze

Oh! leave the past to bury its own dead.
—WILLIAM S. BLUNT (1840–1922) To One Who Would Make a Confession

Historic continuity with the past is not a duty, it is only a necessity.
—JUSTICE OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES (1841–1935)

Tomorrow I will live, the fool does say;
Today itself's too late; the wise lived yesterday.
—MARTIAL (c. 66 A.D.) Epigrams

Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it.
—GEORGE SANTAYANA (1863–1952) Life of Reason

Patience

There is a limit at which forbearance ceases to be a virtue.
—EDMUND BURKE (1729–1797) Observations

Beware the fury of a patient man.
—JOHN DRYDEN (1631–1700) Absalom and Achitophel

Patience, that blending of moral courage with physical timidity.
—THOMAS HARDY (1840–1928) Tess of the D'Urbervilles

All men commend patience, although few be willing to practise it.
—THOMAS À KEMPIS (1380–1471) Imitation of Christ

Forbearance is a part of justice.
—MARCUS AURELIUS (121–180) Meditations

They also serve who only stand and wait.
—JOHN MILTON (1608–1674) On His Blindness

It's a long lane that has no turning.
—SAMUEL RICHARDSON (1689–1761) Clarissa

'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those who wring under the load of sorrow;
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency
To be so moral when he shall endure
The like himself.
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Much Ado About Nothing, V, i, 27

Ye have heard of the patience of Job.
—NEW TESTAMENT: James, v, ii

In your patience possess ye your souls.
—NEW TESTAMENT: Luke, xxi, 18

Patriotism

The die was now cast; I had passed the Rubicon. Swim or sink, live or die, survive or perish with my country was my unalterable determination.
—John Adams (1735–1826)

The country of every man is that one where he lives best.
—Aristophanes (444–380 B.C.) Plutus

No man can be a patriot on an empty stomach.
—William C. Brann (1855–1898) Iconoclast

He who loves not his country can love nothing.
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Two Foscari

Our country! In her intercourse with foreign nations, may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong.
—Stephan Decatur (1779–1820)

My affections are first for my own country, and then, generally, for all mankind.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826) Letter to Thomas Law

My country is the world, and my religion is to do good.
—Thomas Paine (1737–1809) Rights of Man

If I were an American, as I am an Englishman, while a foreign troop was landed in my country I never would lay down my arms, never! never! never!
—William Pitt (1708–1778) Speech, 1777

We should behave toward our country as women behave toward the men they love. A loving wife will do anything for her husband except stop criticizing and trying to improve him. We should cast the same affectionate but sharp glance at our country.
—J. B. Priestley (1894–1984)

Where is the man who owes nothing to the land in which he lives? Whatever the land may be, he owes to it the most precious thing possessed by man, the morality of his actions and the love of virtue.
—Jean-Jacques Rousseau (1712–1778) Émile

Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!
—Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832) Lay of the Last Minstrel

I do love
My country's good with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than my own life.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Coriolanus, III, iii, 111

The proper means of increasing the love we bear our native country is to reside some time in a foreign one.
—William Shenstone (1714–1763) Of Men and Manners

Our country, right or wrong. When right, to be kept right; when wrong, to be put right.
—Carl Schurz (1829–1906) Speech, 1872

The more I see of other countries, the more I love my own.
—Madame de Staël (1766–1817) Corinne

Peace

He makes a solitude, and calls it—peace!
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Bride of Abydos

We have preserved peace in our time.
—Neville Chamberlain (1869–1940) Speech, 1938

Peace rules the day, where reason rules the mind.
—William Collins (1720–1756) Hassan

The gentleman (Josiah Quincy) cannot have forgotten his own sentiment, uttered even on the floor of this House, "Peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must."
—Henry Clay (1777–1852) Speech, 1813

Peace at any price.
—Alphonse de Lamartine (1790–1869)

Peace will come soon and come to stay, and so come as to be worth keeping in all future time. It will then have been proved that among free men there can be no successful appeal from the ballot to the bullet, and that they who take such appeal are sure to lose their cases and pay the cost.
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865)

We supplicate all rulers not to remain deaf to the cry of mankind. Let them do everything in their power to save peace. By so doing they will spare the world the horrors of a war that would have disastrous consequences, such as nobody can foresee.
—Pope John XXIII (1881–1963) Oct. 25, 1962

We will have to want Peace, want it enough to pay for it, before it becomes an accepted rule.
—Eleanor Roosevelt (1884–1964)

A peace is of the nature of a conquest;
For then both parties nobly are subdued
And neither party loser.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Henry IV, IV, ii, 89

Peace be to you. [Pax vobiscum.]
—Old Testament: Genesis, xliii, 23

Go in peace. [Vade in pace.]
—Old Testament: Exodus, iv, 18

The peace of God, which passeth all understanding.
—New Testament: Philippians, iv, 7

Blessed are the peace-makers.
—New Testament: Matthew, v, 9

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.
—New Testament: Luke, ii, 14

They shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.
—Old Testament: Isaiah, ii, 4

People

A people's voice is dangerous when charged with wrath.
—Aeschylus (525–456 B.C.) Agamemnon

The individual is foolish; the multitude, for the moment is foolish, when they act without deliberation; but the species is wise, and, when time is given to it, as a species it always acts right.
—Edmund Burke (1729–1797)

The rabble estimate few things according to their real value, most things according to their prejudices.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) Oratio Pro Quinto Roscio Comaedo

Your people, sir, is nothing but a great beast!
—Alexander Hamilton (1757–1804) Argument with Thomas Jefferson

The Lord prefers common-looking people. That is the reason He made so many of them.
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865)

The people is Everyman, everybody.
Everybody is you and me and all others.
What everybody says is what we all say.
—Carl Sandburg (1878–1967) The People, Yes

Perfection

There never was such beauty in another man, Nature made him, and broke the mould.
—Lodovico Ariosto (1474–1533) Orlando Furioso

The more a thing is perfect, the more it feels pleasure and likewise pain.
—Dante (1265–1321) Inferno

In this broad earth of ours,
Amid the measureless grossness and the slag,
Enclosed and safe within its central heart, Nestles the seed Perfection.
—Walt Whitman (1819–1892) Song of the Universal

Be ye therefore Perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.
—New Testament: Matthew, v, 48

Philanthropy

He who bestows his goods upon the poor,
Shall have as much again, and ten times more.
—John Bunyan (1628–1688) Pilgrim's Progress

In nothing do men more nearly approach the gods than in doing good to their fellow men.
—Cicero (106–43 b.c.) Pro Ligario

The most acceptable service to God is doing good to man.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Autobiography

I expect to pass through this world but once. Any good therefore that I can do, or any kindness that I can show to any fellow creature, let me do it now. Let me not defer or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again.
—Stephen Grellet (1773–1855)

The hands that help are holier than the lips that pray.
—Robert Green Ingersoll (1833–1899)

To pity distress is but human: to relieve it is Godlike.
—Horace Mann (1796–1859) Lectures on Education

Benevolence is the distinguishing characteristic of man. As embodied in man's conduct, it is called the path of duty.
—Mencius (372?–289 b.c.) Discourses

I am a man, and nothing in man's lot can be indifferent to me.
—Terence (c. 190–150 b.c.) Heautontimoroumenos

Myself not ignorant of adversity, I have learned to befriend the unhappy.
—Vergil (70–19 b.c.) Aeneid

I was a stranger, and ye took me in.
—New Testament: Matthew, xxv, 35

Philosophy

What I have gained from philosophy is the ability to feel at ease in any society.
—Aristippus (425?–366? b.c.)

The Philosopher is he to whom the Highest has descended, and the Lowest has mounted up; who is the equal and kindly brother of all.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) Sartor Resartus

Philosophy as a fellow once said to me is only thinking. Thinking is an instrument of adjustment to the conditions of life—but it becomes an end in itself.
—Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes (1841–1935)

Philosophy is an attitude toward life, based on a greater or lesser, but always limited comprehension of the universe as far as we happen to know it.
—Lin Yutang (1895–1976) I Believe

Philosophy is toleration, and it is only one step from toleration to forgiveness.
—Arthur W. Pinero (1855–1934) Second Mrs. Tanqueray

The greater the philosopher, the harder it is for him to answer the questions of common people.
—Henryk Sienkiewicz (1846–1916) Quo Vadis

Men of Athens, I honor and love you; but I shall obey God rather than you, and while I have life and strength I shall never cease from the practise and teaching of philosophy.
—Socrates (470–399? b.c.) in Plato's Apology

Philosophers must deal with ideas, but the trouble with most nineteenth century poets is too much philosophy; they are nearer to being philosophers than poets, without being in the true sense either.
—Allen Tate (1899–1979) Reactionary Essays

Poetry

Poetry is simply the most beautiful, impressive and widely effective mode of saying things, and hence its importance.
—Matthew Arnold (1822–1888) Essays

Poetry has been to me an exceeding great reward; it has soothed my affliction; it has multiplied and refined my enjoyments; it has endeared my solitude; and it has given me the habit of wishing to discover the Good and the Beautiful in all that meets and surrounds me.
—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834)

Poetry is not a turning loose of emotion, but an escape from emotion; it is not the expression of personality, but an escape from personality. But, of course, only those who have personality and emotions know what it means to want to escape from these things.
—T. S. Eliot (1888–1965) Tradition and the Individual Talent

Writing free verse is like playing tennis with the net down.
—Robert Frost (1875–1963) Address

Do you suppose we owe nothing to Pope's deformity?—He said to himself, "If my person be crooked, my verses shall be straight."
—William Hazlitt (1778–1830)

I have reared a monument more enduring than bronze and loftier than the royal pyramids, one that no wasting rain, no unavailing north wind can destroy; no, not even the unending years nor the flight of time itself. I shall not wholly die. The greater part of me shall escape oblivion.
—Horace (65–8 b.c.) Odes

A poet is a nightingale who sits in darkness and sings to cheer its own solitude with sweet sounds.
—Percy B. Shelley (1792–1822) Defense of Poetry

Verse without rhyme is a body without a soul.
—Jonathan Swift (1667–1745) Advice to a Young Poet

Politics

Politics make strange bedfellows.
—John S. Bassett (1867–1928) Life of Jackson

Politics. The conduct of public affairs for private advantage.
—Ambrose Bierce (1842–1914?) Devil's Dictionary

I shall not help crucify mankind upon a cross of gold. I shall not aid in pressing down upon the bleeding brow of labor this crown of thorns.
—William Jennings Bryan (1860–1925) Speech

We are Republicans, and we don't propose to leave our party and identify ourselves with the party whose antecedents have been rum, Romanism and rebellion.
—Rev. S. D. Burchard (1812–1891) Speech, 1884

When I was called upon to be Prime Minister, now nearly two years ago, there were not many applicants for the job. Since then perhaps the market has improved.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) Speech, Jan. 1942

Damn your principles. Stick to your party.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881)

Every time I bestow a vacant office I make a hundred discontented persons and one ingrate.
—Louis XIV of France (1638–1715)

The various admirable movements in which I have been engaged have always developed among their members a large lunatic fringe.
—Theodore Roosevelt (1858–1919)

Prayer

"Oh, God, if I were sure I were to die tonight I would repent at once." It is the commonest prayer in all languages.
—James M. Barrie (1860–1937) Sentimental Tommy

He prayeth well who loveth well
Both man and bird and beast;
He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all.
—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834) Ancient Mariner

We, on our side, are praying to Him to give us victory, because we believe we are right; but those on the other side pray to Him, too, for victory, believing they are right. What must He think of us?
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865)

God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change things I can, and wisdom to know the difference.
—Reinhold Niebuhr (1892–1971)

More things are wrought by prayer Than this world dreams of.
—Tennyson (1809–1892) Morte d'Arthur

I have never made but one prayer to God, a very short one: "O Lord, make my enemies ridiculous." And God granted it.
—Voltaire (1694–1778)

Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall receive them.
—New Testament: Mark, XI, 23, 24

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you.
—New Testament: Matthew, vii, 7

Pride

Pride is the beginning of sin.
—Ben Sira (c. 190 B.C.) Book of Wisdom

Pride, Envy, Avarice—these are the sparks Have set on fire the hearts of all men.
—Dante (1265–1321) Inferno

The readiness with which we admit a fault or acknowledge a weakness may be only our pride masquerading as humility.
—Oscar Hammling (1890–)

In pride, in reas'ning pride, our error lies;
All quit their sphere, and rush into the skies!
Pride still is aiming at the bless'd abodes,
Men would be angels, Angels would be Gods.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Man

War is the child of pride, and pride the daughter of riches.
—Jonathan Swift (1667–1745) Battle of the Books

Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xvi, 18

Prudence

Make haste slowly.
—Augustus Caesar (63 B.C.–A.D. 14)

Put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your powder dry.
—Oliver Cromwell (1599–1658)

The greatest good is prudence; a more precious thing even than philosophy; from it spring all the other virtues.
—Epicurus (342–270 B.C.) Letter to Menaeceus

That man is prudent who neither hopes nor fears anything from the uncertain events of the future.
—Anatole France (1844–1924) Procurator of Judea

Beware of rashness, but with energy and sleepless vigilance go forward and give us victories.
—Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865) Letter to Gen. Hooker

Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak.
—New Testament: James, i, 19

Reading

Reading is to the Mind, what Exercise is to the Body.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719) The Tatler

To read a book for the first time is to make the acquaintance of a new friend; to read it a second time is to meet an old one.
—Selwyn G. Champion (1875–1950) Racial Proverbs

Some read to think—these are rare; some to write—these are common; and some to talk—and these form the great majority.
—Charles C. Colton (1780?–1832) Lacon

There is an art of reading, as well as an art of thinking, and an art of writing.
—Isaac D'Israeli (1766–1848) Literary Character

A man ought to read just as inclination leads him; for what he reads as a task will do him little good. A young man should read five hours in a day, and so may acquire a great deal of knowledge.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Boswell's Life

I'm quite illiterate, but I read a lot.
—J. D. Salinger (1919–) Catcher in the Rye

He hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Love's Labour's Lost, IV, ii, 25

The habit of reading is the only enjoyment in which there is no alloy; it lasts when all other pleasures fade.
—Anthony Trollope (1815–1882)

Reason

Reason is a light that God has kindled in the soul.
—Aristotle (384–322 B.C.) Art of Rhetoric

He who will not reason is a bigot; he who cannot is a fool; and he who dares not is a slave.
—William Drummond (1585–1649) Academical Question

It is wise even in adversity to listen to reason.
—Euripides (480–406 B.C.) Hecuba

The soul of man is divided into three parts, intelligence, reason and passion. Intelligence and passion are possessed by other animals, but reason by man alone. . . . Reason is immortal, all else mortal.
—Pythagoras (582–500 B.C.)

Regret

Regret not that which is past; and trust not to thine own righteousness.
—St. Anthony (c. 250–350)

O lost days of delight, that are wasted in doubting and waiting!
O lost hours and days in which we might have been happy!
—Henry W. Longfellow (1807–1882) Tales of a Wayside Inn

Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: "It might have been."
—John Greenleaf Whittier (1807–1892) Maud Muller

Respect

Respect is what we owe; love, what we give.
—Philip James Bailey (1816–1902) Festus

He removes the greatest ornament of friendship, who takes away from it respect.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Amicitia

A man's real life is that accorded to him in the thoughts of other men by reason of respect or natural love.
—Joseph Conrad (1857–1924) Under Western Eyes

Deference is the instinctive respect which we pay to the great and good; the unconscious acknowledgment of the superiority or excellence of others.
—Tryon Edwards (1809–1894)

Even a nod from a person who is esteemed is of more force than a thousand arguments or studied sentences from others.
—Plutarch (46?–120?) Lives: Phocion

There is no respect of persons with God.
—New Testament: Romans, ii, 11

Retirement

Don't think of retiring from the world until the world will be sorry that you retire. I hate a fellow whom pride or cowardice or laziness drive into a corner, and who does nothing when he is there but sit and growl. Let him come out as I do, and bark.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784)

Let me caution persons grown old in active business, not lightly, nor without weighing their own resources, to forego their customary employment all at once, for there may be danger in it.
—Charles Lamb (1775–1834) Superannuated Man

I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life
With quiet hours.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) I Henry IV, V, i, 23

Science

Science bestowed immense new powers on man and at the same time created conditions which were largely beyond his comprehension and still more beyond his control.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) Speech, March 31, 1949

In science we must be interested in things, not in persons.
—Marie Curie (1867–1934)

What art was to the ancient world, science is to the modern.
—Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881) Coningsby

Why does this magnificent applied science, which saves work and makes life easier, bring us little happiness? The simple answer runs, because we have not yet learned to make sensible use of it.
—Albert Einstein (1879–1955) Address, 1931

Science is the knowledge of consequences, and dependence of one fact upon another.
—Thomas Hobbes (1588–1679) Leviathan

In science the credit goes to the man who convinces the world, not to the man to whom the idea first occurs.
—Sir William Osler (1849–1919)

Sea

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean, roll.
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain:
Man marks the earth with ruin, —his control Stops with the shore.
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Childe Harold

The sea possesses a power over one's moods that has the effect of a will. The sea can hypnotize. Nature in general can do so.
—Hendrik Ibsen (1828–1906) Lady from the Sea

Comrades! now that we have established our peace on land, let us conquer the freedom of the seas.
—Napoleon Bonaparte (1769–1821)

Any one can hold the helm when the sea is calm.
—Publilius Syrus (1st C. B.C.) Sententiae

The sea folds away from you like a mystery. You can look and look at it and mystery never leaves it.
—Carl Sandburg (1878–1967) Remembrance Rock

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes;
Nothing of him that doth fade
But doth suffer a sea-change Into something rich and strange.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Tempest, I, ii, 394

All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full.
—Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, i, 7

Season

To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven.
—Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, iii, 1

Self-Control

One of the most important, but one of the most difficult things for a powerful mind is, to be its own master. A pond may lie quiet in a plain; but a lake wants mountains to compass and hold it in.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719)

I count him braver who overcomes his desires than him who conquers his enemies; for the hardest victory is the victory over self.
—Aristotle (384–322 B.C.) Stobaeus: Florilegium

Conquer thyself. Till thou hast done this, thou art but a slave for it is almost as well to be subjected to another's appetite as to thine own.
—Robert Burton (1577–1640) Anatomy of Melancholy

Nothing gives one person so much advantage over another as to remain always cool and unruffled under all circumstances.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826)

No conflict is so severe as his who labors to subdue himself.
—Thomas à Kempis (1380–1471) Imitation of Christ

He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xvi, 32

Selfishness

People often grudge others what they cannot enjoy themselves.
—Aesop (6th C. B.C.) Dog in the Manger

This is the plain truth: every one ought to keep a sharp eye for the main chance.
—Plautus (c. 254–184 B.C.) Asinaria

We have always known that heedless self-interest was bad morals; we know now that it is bad economics.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) Second Inaugural

There's plenty of boys that will come hankering and gruvelling around when you've got an apple, and beg the core off you; but when they've got one, and you beg for the core, and remind them how you give them a core one time, they make a mouth at you, and say thank you most to death, but there ain't a-going to be no core.
—Mark Twain (1835–1910) Tom Sawyer Abroad

Selfishness is the only real atheism; aspiration, unselfishness, the only real religion.
—Israel Zangwill (1864–1926) Children of the Ghetto

Self-Respect

The reverence of a man's self is, next to religion, the chiefest bridle of all vices.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620) New Atlantis

Few men survey themselves with so much severity as not to admit prejudices in their own favor.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) The Rambler

I care not so much what I am in the opinion of others as what I am in my own; I would be rich of myself and not by borrowing.
—Michel de Montaigne (1533–1592) Essays

If ye would go up high, then use your own legs! Do not get yourselves carried aloft; do not seat yourselves on other's backs and heads!
—Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900) Thus Spake Zarathustra

To have a respect for ourselves guides our morals; and to have a deference for others governs our manners.
—Laurence Sterne (1713–1768)

Serenity

Remember to preserve an even mind in adverse circumstance and likewise in prosperity a mind free from overweening joy.
—Horace (65–8 B.C.) Odes

Calm of mind, all passion spent.
—John Milton (1608–1674) Samson Agonistes

He who is of a calm and happy nature will hardly feel the pressure of age, but to him who is of an opposite disposition youth and age are equally a burden.
—Plato (428–347 B.C.) The Republic

Silence

Silence gives consent.
—Canon Law: Decretals

Silence is the unbearable repartee.
—G. K. Chesterton (1874–1936) Dickens

Silence is true wisdom's best reply.
—Euripides (480–406 B.C.) Fragments

There is an eloquent silence: it serves sometimes to approve, sometimes to condemn; there is a mocking silence; there is a respectful silence.
—François de la Rochefoucauld (1613–1680) Reflections

He has occasional flashes of silence, that make his conversation perfectly delightful.
—Sydney Smith (1771–1845) Speaking of Macaulay

Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xvii, 28

Sleep

We sleep, but the loom of life never stops and the pattern which was weaving when the sun went down is weaving when the sun comes up tomorrow.
—Henry Ward Beecher (1813–1887) Life Thoughts

Sleep is a death; oh, make me try
By sleeping, know what it is to die,
And as gently lay my head
On my grave, as now my bed.
—Thomas Browne (1605–1682) Religio Medici

Our life is two-fold: Sleep hath its own world,
A boundry between the things misnamed
Death and existence: Sleep hath its own world.
And a wise realm of wild reality.
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) The Dream

Now blessings light on him that first invented this same sleep! It covers a man all over, thoughts and all, like a cloak; 'tis meat for the hungry, drink for the thirsty, heat for the cold, and cold for the hot. 'Tis the current coin that purchases all the pleasures of the world cheap; and the balance that sets the king and the shepherd, the fool and the wise man even.
—CERVANTES (1547–1616) Don Quixote

O Sleep, thou rest of all things, Sleep, gentlest of the gods, peace of the soul, who puttest care to flight.
—OVID (43 B.C.–A.D. 18?) Metamorphoses

Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) King Lear, IV, iv, 12

Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleave of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast.
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Macbeth, II, ii, 36

Thou hast been called, O sleep! the friend of woe;
But 'tis the happy that have called thee so.
—ROBERT SOUTHEY (1774–1843) Curse of Kehama

Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep.
—OLD TESTAMENT: Proverbs, vi, 10

Smile

What sunshine is to flowers, smiles are to humanity. They are but trifles, to be sure; but, scattered along life's pathway, the good they do is inconceivable.
—JOSEPH ADDISON (1672–1719)

There is a smile of Love,
And there is a smile of Deceit,
And there is a smile of smiles
In which these two smiles meet.
—WILLIAM BLAKE (1757–1827) Smile and Frown

A smile is ever the most bright and beautiful with a tear upon it. What is the dawn without the dew? The tear is rendered by the smile precious above the smile itself.
—WALTER S. LANDOR (1775–1864)

Soldier

It were better to be a soldier's widow than a coward's wife.
—THOMAS B. ALDRICH (1836–1907) Mercedes

I love a brave soldier who has undergone the baptism of fire.
—NAPOLEON BONAPARTE (1769–1821)

The army is a school in which the miser becomes generous, and the generous prodigal; miserly soldiers are like monsters, very rarely seen.
—CERVANTES (1547–1616) Don Quixote

How sleep the brave, who sink to rest,
By all their country's wishes blest!
—WILLIAM COLLINS (1721–1759) Ode Written in 1746

For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an'
"Chuck 'im out, the brute!"
But it's the "Saviour of 'is country" when the guns begin to shoot.
—RUDYARD KIPLING (1865–1936) Tommy

But in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here.
—ABRAHAM LINCOLN (1809–1865) Gettysburg Address

"Companions," said he [Saturninus], "you have lost a good captain, to make of him a bad general."
—MICHEL DE MONTAIGNE (1533–1592) Essays

Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt:
He only lived but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Macbeth, V, vii, 68

The proper qualities of a general are judgment and deliberation.
—TACITUS (c. 55–117) History

The combat infantryman should combine the arts of a successful poacher, a cat-burglar and a gunman.
—FIELD MARSHAL EARL WAVELL (1885–1950)

Son See CHILDREN

Sorrow

There is no sorrow which length of time does not diminish and soften.
—CICERO (106–43 B.C.) De Finibus

I have had sorrows . . . but I have borne them ill.
I have broken where I should have bent.
—CHARLES DICKENS (1812–1870) Barnaby Rudge

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions.
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Hamlet, IV, v, 78

Summer

Heat, ma'am! It was so dreadful here that I found nothing left for it but to take off my flesh and sit in my bones.
—SYDNEY SMITH (1771–1845) in Lady Holland's Memoirs

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
—SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616) Sonnets, xviii

Today the summer has come at my window with its sighs and murmurs; and the bees are plying their minstrelsy at the court of the flowering grove.
—RABINDRANATH TAGORE (1861–1941) Gitanjali

Sympathy

The man who melts
With social sympathy, though not allied,
Is of more worth than a thousand kinsmen.
—EURIPIDES (480–406 B.C.) Orestes

Sympathy is a virtue much cultivated by those who are morally uplifted by the sufferings and misfortunes of others.
—OSCAR HAMMLING (1890–)

As man laughs with those that laugh, so he weeps with those that weep; if thou wish me to weep, thou must first shed tears thyself; then thy sorrows will touch me.
—HORACE (65–8 B.C.) De Arte Poetica

It is better to be generous than just. It is sometimes better to sympathize instead of trying to understand.
—Pierre Lecomte de Noüy (1883–1947) Human Destiny

Talent

Doing easily what others find difficult is talent. . . .
—Henri-Frédéric Amiel (1828–1881) Journal

Every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner and another after that.
—New Testament: I Corinthians, vii, 7

Taste

Happy is the man possessing
The superior holy blessing
Of a judgment and a taste Accurate, refined and chaste.
—Aristophanes (444–380 B.C.) The Frogs

Love of beauty is Taste. . . . The creation of beauty is Art.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882)

Teacher and Teaching

A teacher affects eternity; he can never tell where his influence stops.
—Henry Adams (1838–1918) Education of Henry Adams

The true teacher defends his pupils against his own personal influence.
—Amos Bronson Alcott (1799–1888) Orphic Sayings

To know how to suggest is the great art of teaching.
—Henri-Frédéric Amiel (1828–1881) Journal

What nobler employment, or more valuable to the state, than that of the man who instructs the rising generation?
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) De Divinatione

The secret of teaching is to appear to have known all your life what you learned this afternoon.
—Unknown

Thrift

A man's ordinary expenses ought to be but half of his receipts, and if he think to wax rich, but to the third part.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1620)

He will always be a slave, who does not know how to live upon a little.
—Horace (65–8 B.C.) Epistulae

Resolve not to be poor; whatever you have, spend less.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Boswell's Life

Thrift is care and scruple in the spending of one's means. It is not a virtue, and it requires neither skill nor talent.
—Immanuel Kant (1724–1804) Lecture

Time

Go, sir, gallop, and don't forget that the world was made in six days. You can ask me for anything you like except time.
—Napoleon Bonaparte (1769–1821) To one of his aides

Never the time and the place
And the loved one all together!
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Never the Time and Place

There is no remembrance which time does not obliterate, nor pain which death does not end.
—Cervantes (1547–1616) Don Quixote

For though we sleep or wake, or roam, or ride, Aye fleets the time, it will no man abide.
—Geoffrey Chaucer (1340?–1400) Canterbury Tales

Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of.
—Ben Franklin (1706–1790) Poor Richard's Almanack

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
  Old Time is still a-flying,
And this same flower that smiles today,
  Tomorrow will be dying.
—Robert Herrick (1591–1674) To the Virgins

Stand still, you ever moving spheres of heaven,
That time may cease, and midnight never come.
—Christopher Marlowe (1564–1593) Dr. Faustus

The time which we have at our disposal every day is elastic; the passions that we feel expand it, those that we inspire contract it; and habit fills up what remains.
—Marcel Proust (1871–1922) Remembrance of Things Past

Time flies on restless pinions—constant never.
Be constant—and thou chainest time forever.
—Johann Schiller (1759–1805) Epigram

Make use of time, let not advantage slip;
Beauty within itself should not be wasted:
Fair flowers that are not gather'd in their prime,
Rot and consume themselves in little time.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Venus and Adonis, 129

There is . . . a time to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted; A time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up; A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance; . . . A time to love and a time to hate.
—Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, iii, 1

Tolerance and Intolerance

He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weakness that he never felt.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719) Cato

Toleration is good for all or it is good for none.
—Edmund Burke (1729–1797) Speech, 1773

I have seen gross intolerance shown in support of toleration.
—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834) Biographia

Give to every other human being every right you claim for yourself.
—Robert Green Ingersoll (1833–1899) Limitations of Toleration

Shall I ask the brave soldier, who fights by my side
In the cause of mankind, if our creeds agree!
Shall I give up the friend I have valued and tried,
If he kneel not before the same altar with me.
—Thomas Moore (1779–1852) Come, Send Round the Wine

It is easy to be tolerant when you do not care.
—Clement F. Rogers (1866–) Verify Your References

It is now no more that toleration is spoken of, as if it were by the indulgence of one class of people that another enjoyed the exercise of their inherent rights.
—George Washington (1732–1799) Letter to Hebrew Congregation of Newport, R.I.

Truth

Truth is within ourselves; it takes no rise
From outward things, whate'er you may believe
There is an inmost centre in us all Where truth abides in fulness.
—Robert Browning (1812–1889) Paracelsus

Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies among his worshippers.
—William Cullen Bryant (1794–1878) Living Lost

'Tis strange, but true; for truth is always strange,— Stranger than fiction.
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Don Juan

The greatest friend of truth is Time, her greatest enemy is Prejudice, and her constant companion is Humility.
—Charles C. Colton (1780?–1832) Lacon

God offers to every mind its choice between truth and repose. Take which you please—you can never have both.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882) Essays

If the truth hurts most of us so badly that we don't want it told, it hurts even more grievously those who dare to tell it. It is a two-edged sword, often deadly dangerous to the user.
—Judge Ben Lindsey (1869–1943) Revolt of Modern Youth

The smallest atom of truth represents some man's bitter toil and agony; for every ponderable chunk of it there is a brave truth-seeker's grave upon some lonely ash-dump and a soul roasting in hell.
—H. L. Mencken (1880–1956) Prejudices

Truth often suffers more by the heat of its defenders, than from the arguments of its opposers.
—William Penn (1644–1718) Fruits of Solitude

'Tis not enough your counsel still be true;
Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods do.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Criticism

We know the truth has been Told over to the world a thousand times;—
But we have had no ears to listen yet
For more than fragments of it; we have heard
A murmur now and then, an echo here And there.
—Edwin Arlington Robinson (1869–1935) Captain Orsig

A thing is not necessarily true because a man dies for it.
—Oscar Wilde (1854–1900) Portrait of Mr. W. H.

That witty and eloquent old Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said . . . "You needn't fear to handle the truth roughly; she is no invalid."
—Woodrow Wilson (1856–1924) Address, 1918

If you shut up truth and bury it under the ground, it will but grow, and gather to itself such explosive power that the day it bursts through, it will blow up everything in its way.
—Émile Zola (1840–1902) J'accuse

Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.
—New Testament: John, viii, 32

Tyranny

I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826)

They [the people in lands with dictators] have forgotten the lessons of history that the ultimate failures of dictatorships cost humanity far more than any temporary failures of democracy.
—Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) Address, 1937

Like the form of a seen and unheard prowler, like a slow and cruel violence, is the known unspoken menace:
do what we tell you or go hungry; listen to us or you don't eat.
—Carl Sandburg (1878–1967) The People, Yes

And the little screaming fact that sounds through all history: repression works only to strengthen and knit the repressed.
—John Steinbeck (1902–1968) Grapes of Wrath

Valor See courage

Vanity

An ostentatious man will rather relate a blunder or an absurdity he has committed, than be debarred from talking of his own dear person.
—Joseph Addison (1672–1719)

One will rarely err if extreme actions be ascribed to vanity, ordinary actions to habit, and mean actions to fear.
—Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900)

Vanity as an impulse has without doubt been of far more benefit to civilization than modesty has ever been.
—William E. Woodward (1874–1950) George Washington

Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; all is vanity.
—Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, i, 2

War

In war there are no winners.
—Neville Chamberlain (1869–1940) Speech, 1938

Little did we guess that what has been called the Century of the Common Man would witness as its outstanding feature more common men killing each other with greater facilities than any other five centuries together in the history of the world.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) Speech, 1949

If, however, there is to be a war of nerves let us make sure our nerves are strong and are fortified by the deepest convictions of our hearts.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) Speech, Mar. 31, 1949

I wisht it cud be fixed up, so' th' men that starts th' wars could do th' fightin'.
—Finley Peter Dunne (1867–1936) War and War Makers

So long as mankind shall continue to lavish more praise upon its destroyers than upon its benefactors war shall remain the chief pursuit of ambitious minds.
—Edward Gibbon (1737–1794) Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire

It must be thoroughly understood that the lost land will never be won back by solemn appeals to the good God, nor by hopes in any League of Nations, but only by the force of arms.
—Adolf Hitler (1889–1945) Mein Kampf

If—which God prevent—a new war breaks out, nothing else will await or confront all peoples . . . but appalling destruction and ruin, and this whether they are victor or vanquished.
—Pope John XXIII (1881–1963) July 2, 1959

War is the greatest plague that can afflict mankind. . . . Any scourge is preferable to it.
—Martin Luther (1483–1546) Table-Talk, No. 821

War ought to be the only study of a prince.
—Niccolo Machiavelli (1469–1527) The Prince

They shall not pass.
—Marshal Henri Pétain (1856–1951) Battle of Verdun, 1916

And after the strife of war begins the strife of peace.
—Carl Sandburg (1878–1967) The People, Yes

And Caesar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Ate by his side come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice,
Cry "Havoc" and let slip the dogs of war.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Julius Caesar, III, i, 270

In peace there's nothing so becomes a man
As modest stillness and humility;
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Henry V, III, ii, 3

In the arts of life man invents nothing: but in the arts of death he outdoes Nature herself, and produces by chemistry and machinery all the slaughter of plague, pestilence and famine.
—George Bernard Shaw (1856–1950) Man and Superman, Act III

It [War] is all hell. . . . I look upon war with horror.
—William Tecumseh Sherman (1820–1891) Address, 1880

To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.
—George Washington (1732–1799) Speech, 1790

The war to end wars.
—H. G. Wells (1860–1946) Attributed

Wars and rumours of wars.
—New Testament: Matthew, xxiv, 6

Weather

For the man sound in body and serene of mind there is no such thing as bad weather! every sky has its beauty, and storms which whip the blood do but make it pulse more vigorously.
—George Gissing (1857–1903)

We may achieve climate, but weather is thrust upon us.
—O. Henry (1862–1910) Fog in Santone

Climate is theory. Weather is condition.
—Oliver Herford (1865–1935)

I wonder that any human being should remain in a cold country who could find room in a warm one.
—Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826) Letter

The fog comes on little cat feet.
It sits looking over the harbor and city on silent haunches and then, moves on.
—Carl Sandburg (1878–1967) Fog

When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather today: for the sky is red and lowring.
—New Testament: Matthew, xvi, 2–3

Wife

Helmer: Before all else you are a wife and a mother.
Nora: That I no longer believe. I think that before all else I am a human being.
—Henrik Ibsen (1828–1906) Doll's House

If you want peace in the house, do what your wife wants.
—African proverb

A good wife should be as a looking glass to represent her husband's face and passion; if he be pleasant, she should be merry; if he laugh, she should smile; if he look sad, she should participate of his sorrow.
—Plutarch (46?–120?) Moralia: Advice to a Bride

She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.
—Old Testament: Proverbs, xxxi, 27

Wisdom

Wise men, though all laws were abolished, would lead the same lives.
—Aristophanes (444–380 b.c.)

Make wisdom your provision for the journey from youth to old age, for it is a more certain support than all other possessions.
—Bias (f. 570 b.c.)

A man doesn't begin to attain wisdom until he recognizes that he is no longer indispensable.
—Admiral Richard E. Byrd (1888–1957) Alone

Wisdom is full of pity, and thereby Men pay for too much wisdom with much pain.
—Euripides (480–406 b.c.) Electra

Wisdom is not finally tested in the schools,
Wisdom cannot be passed from one having it to another not having it, Wisdom is of the soul, is not susceptible of proof, is its own proof.
—Walt Whitman (1819–1892) Song of the Open Road

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.
—Old Testament: Psalms, cxi, 10

Writing

I don't wait for moods. You accomplish nothing if you do that. Your mind must know it has got to get down to work.
—Pearl Buck (1892–1973) Reader's Digest

Writing a long and substantial book is like having a friend and companion at your side, to whom you can always turn for comfort and amusement, and whose society becomes more attractive as a new and widening field of interest is lighted in the mind.
—Winston Churchill (1874–1965) Gathering Storm

Composition is for the most part, an effort of slow diligence and steady perseverence, to which the mind is dragged by necessity or resolution.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) The Adventurer

The chief glory of every people arises from its authors.
—Samuel Johnson (1709–1784) Preface to Dictionary

The writers who have nothing to say are the ones you can buy; the others have too high a price.
—Walter Lippmann (1889–1974) Preface to Politics

The impulse to create beauty is rather rare in literary men . . . Far ahead of it comes the yearning to make money. And after the yearning to make money comes the yearning to make a noise.
—H. L. Mencken (1880–1956) Prejudices

Youth

Young men are fitter to invent than to judge; fitter for execution than for counsel; and fitter for new projects than for settled business.
—Francis Bacon (1561–1626) Of Youth and Age

They shall not grow old, as we that are left grow old;
Age shall not weary them, nor the years condemn.
At the going down of the sun, and in the morning,
We shall remember them.
—Laurence Binyon (1869–1943) For the Fallen

Blow out, you bugles, over the rich Dead!
There's none of these so lonely and poor of old,
But dying, has made us rarer gifts than gold.
These laid the world away: poured out the red Sweet wine of youth; gave up the years to be
Of work and joy, and that unhoped serene That men call age, and those who would have been Their sons, they gave their immortality.
—Rupert Brooke (1887–1915) The Dead (1914)

Ah! happy years! once more who would not be a boy!
—Lord Byron (1788–1824) Childe Harolde

Youth is to all the glad season of life; but often only by what it hopes, not by what it attains, or what it escapes.
—Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) Essays

As I approve of a youth that has something of the old man in him, so I am no less pleased with an old man that has something of the youth. He that follows this rule may be old in body, but can never be so in mind.
—Cicero (106–43 B.C.) Cato

There is a feeling of Eternity in youth which makes us amends for everything. To be young is to be as one of the Immortals.
—William Hazlitt (1778–1830) Table-Talk

When all the world is young, lad,
And all the trees are green;
And every goose a swan, lad,
And every lass a queen;
Then hey, for boot and horse, lad,
And round the world away;
Young blood must have its course, lad,
And every dog his day.
—Charles Kingsley (1819–1875) Water Babies

How different from the present man was the youth of earlier days!
—Ovid (43 B.C.–A.D. 18) Heroides

We think our fathers fools, so wise we grow;
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so.
—Alexander Pope (1688–1744) Essay on Criticism

My salad days;
When I was green in judgement.
—Shakespeare (1564–1616) Antony and Cleopatra, I, v, 73

Through all the lying days of my youth
I swayed my leaves and flowers in the sun;
Now I may wither into the truth.
—William Butler Yeats (1865–1939) The Coming of Wisdom with Time

Youth is not rich in time; it may be poor;
Part with it as with money, sparing; pay
No moment but in purchase of its worth,
And what it's worth, ask death-beds; they can tell.
—Edward Young (1684–1765) Night Thoughts
